A brief overview

The U.S. Foreign Account Tax Compliance Act (FATCA) added a new component to the U.S. tax withholding and information reporting regime. The law effectively makes foreign financial institutions (FFIs) information-gathering agents of the U.S. Internal Revenue Service (the IRS) by threatening an FFI’s own U.S. source income and sale proceeds with a 30% withholding tax (30% Withholding).

This new regime is not intended to be a revenue-raiser for the U.S. government, but rather to provide a mechanism to identify U.S. investors in FFIs. The 30% Withholding does not apply, for example, if the relevant FFI enters into an agreement with the IRS to report certain information in respect of financial accounts which are held by U.S. persons (as well as certain non-U.S. entities which have a 10% U.S. owner), or complies with prescribed procedures to ensure that the FFI does not maintain financial accounts of such persons or entities.

By entering into such an agreement, an FFI will also oblige itself to apply 30% Withholding to certain payments it makes to other FFIs which have not entered into such agreements.

In 2012, the U.S. published a model intergovernmental agreement (IGA) which provides relief from the withholding rules described above for certain FFIs operating in countries which agree to its terms. Such FFIs will be required to report information about financial accounts to their home country tax authorities, which will in turn transmit it to the IRS.

In September 2012, the UK became the first nation to enter into an IGA with the U.S. In 2013, the UK issued regulations which require UK FFIs to report information to the UK HM Revenue & Customs (HMRC), which information HMRC will transmit to the IRS pursuant to the U.S.-UK IGA. HMRC has also published detailed guidance on the U.S.-UK IGA and the UK regulations. Subsequently, over 20 other jurisdictions have signed IGAs, including Spain, Germany, France, the Netherlands and Italy.
FATCA: who it will affect

The expansive definition of FFI provided by the law means that the FATCA rules are of concern not only to banks, but also to paying agents, investment funds, hedge funds, private equity funds, securitisation vehicles and many other forms of financial intermediary.

The expansive definition of “U.S. source income” means that many transactions which appear to have no U.S. nexus may nevertheless generate income subject to FATCA withholding. For example, certain amounts paid by a non-U.S. company which has elected to be disregarded as an entity separate from its U.S. parent may have a U.S. source for FATCA purposes.

The expansive definition of “account holder” provided by the law means that information may need to be collected not only in respect of customers of banks, but also in respect of holders of some non-publicly traded debt and equity investments in FFIs (eg holders of privately-placed bank debt, equity investors in private equity funds, note holders in securitisation vehicles).

While the IGA network will significantly relieve the impact of FATCA for FFIs in IGA jurisdictions, it does not provide a complete solution and significant challenges remain.
Key issues

Compliance
Although on its face a statute relating to taxation, advice will be required by FFIs to implement the compliance aspects of FATCA. However, compliance is not the only challenge that FFIs face. In particular, FFIs need to review (and, in some cases, amend) existing documentation to ensure that they can carry out their FATCA obligations, and to ensure that they are not subject to financial penalties (eg an obligation to gross up for FATCA withholding).

Contract and commercial
FATCA gives rise to a number of issues which FFIs need to address immediately in the context of transactions into which they are entering today. These include the following:

- Do the transaction documents to which the FFI is a party properly allocate the risk of FATCA withholding among the parties?
- Do the transaction documents to which the FFI is a party contain provisions which help identify and minimise potential risks of FATCA withholding on payment streams?
- Even if an FFI is itself exempt from FATCA withholding (eg under an IGA), do its transaction documents protect its counterparties from FATCA withholding (eg secondary market purchasers of interests in syndicated loans)?

Regulatory
Compliance with FATCA will give rise to a number of non-tax legal issues which FFIs will need to address, particularly those outside of IGA jurisdictions. These include the following:

- Will the disclosure of information about U.S. account holders to the IRS violate agreements between the account holder and the FFI?
- Will such disclosure violate data protection or bank secrecy laws in the jurisdiction in which the FFI or the account holder is located?
- Will the laws of the FFI’s or account holder’s jurisdictions permit the closure of an account if the account holder refuses to comply with the information disclosure requirements, as is mandated by FATCA?

These and other legal difficulties are likely to present themselves to FFIs as they attempt to meet the requirements imposed by FATCA. The IGA network is likely to alleviate some of the above difficulties significantly.

How Allen & Overy can help
We have produced a series of training materials on FATCA that we are happy to provide and present without cost in appropriate circumstances. The presentations are designed to give in-house tax, legal and business teams of banks and other financial institutions an understanding of the issues. They cover steps organisations should be taking now, and outline the negotiating, contractual, regulatory and local law challenges they may face.
The Allen & Overy FATCA team

We have a specialist tax team which is able to advise on all areas of FATCA and its related legal issues, including local law advice regarding the effect of IGAs.

It also includes lawyers in Allen & Overy offices worldwide including specialists in the non-tax regulatory, contract law, and other areas which are essential to FATCA compliance.

They are members of, and advise and participate in, key FATCA industry groups, such as:

– participants in the drafting of the FATCA riders published by the Loan Market Association (LMA);

– principal drafters of the International Capital Markets Association letter of comment to the U.S. Congress on the proposed FATCA legislation;

– U.S. and UK FATCA specialists actively engaged in assisting the ISDA European Tax Committee with its work on FATCA;

– members of FATCA working group of the Alternative Investment Management Association; and – members of the Tax Section of the New York State Bar Association and participants in its Subcommittees commenting on FATCA.
