Lights of Main Library cast a symbolic reflection as a beacon of knowledge after a light Spring shower.

A center of knowledge and seeking for knowledge, a center of lessons to learn and lessons learned, this is the University of Arkansas. Modern facilities plus the latest methods of instruction combine to offer the student the best possible atmosphere conducive to self-advancement by education. Here is found knowledge about science, knowledge about the arts, knowledge about nature, knowledge about people, and knowledge about knowledge. First and foremost, the University is an Institute of knowledge.

Distinguished lecturer, Senator J. W. Fulbright, addresses capacity crowd in Union.
Always striving to prepare and improve are the two main goals of the University, both in curriculum and in facilities. Continuous progressive planning has enabled the University to keep well abreast with the changing times and current trends.

Modern structures are designed always with the ever increasing enrollment and other needs of the future in mind. The University is definitely an institute with eyes to the future.

The Formation of Habit Patterns

With the coming of classes comes the freshman who seems perpetually lost, the upperclassman who is bored before the professor opens his mouth, the cocky, ubiquitous, student who takes issue with every point his instructor makes and proceeds to flunk the course, the quiet individual in the back who never says a word and sets the "A" bracket so high that its unapproachable.

With classes and with the students comes the first football game and then Dad's Day. With suitable hoopla, the dads arrive on the campus and proceed to relive their college days. They visit the old fraternity house and brag about how tough they had it when they were pledges, while their smiling wives stand by understandingly.

The Razorback photographers from Randell arrive and the pictures are made in the Union. The photographers leave and everyone settles into his pattern with few interruptions.
While the Tri-Delt team looks around apprehensively for possible intruders, the ChiO's and Zetas square off in the Balloon Bust.

Tri-Delts Hassle to Relays Victory

The first Zeta gets her foot wet in their ill-fated pull in the tug-o-war as supporters and hecklers rave on.

This ChiO entrant feels around for her mysterious mollusk and the DG thrashes on in the attack on the egg and only, incidentally, her head.

Pi Phi junior Betty Clark seems to be coming out of her sack but she retains her lead over well-sacked but floundering opponents in sack race.

Clean-shaven Gene Sackley makes his getaway from pledges made suddenly aggressive by the Sigma Nu tradition of dunking members.
An Adventure in Gator-Land

The Porkers tied for the Southwest Conference Championship and earned a chance to face Georgia Tech in the Gator Bowl. The team and thousands of Arkansans streamed into Jacksonville, Florida to see Arkansas win, 14-7.

Arriving back at school to start the long last stretch toward finals, students discovered that they were snowed in, and they remained so for six weeks as the snow kept falling.

The snow proved encouraging for some, but for others it merely meant that there was another distraction, going out and snowballing or being snowballed.

The Fine Arts center came out with a dance to provide still another diversion.

Acting President Storm Whaley went to Little Rock in another capacity for the University as the Board of Trustees announced the selection of David Wallins as President. Finals came.

May-Day for Farmers and Lawyers

The Agri Students had a field day with bucking broncs, a cow milking contest, and an all Agri dance and barbecue. The Agrarians named ADPi Sondra Hall as Agri Queen over four other candidates.

The Lawyers selected no queen, but had a day on May-Day that included a moot court trial and a banquet-dance. Politics filled the air as speeches were delivered in a rally and pre-election dance in the Union ballroom. Despite no publicity of the rally, approximately 200 turned out to boost the candidates.

Jim Dennis and Dick Dahlem filed for President of Associated Students, while Bill Aaldrum drew no opposition for Vice President. Three candidates were in the running for Secretary and two entered the race for Treasurer. Senate Seats had to be filled and a host of students filed. "Politicking" began.

Quarterback Billy Moore pitches out to halfback Bruce Fullerton for an eight-yard gain in the first Red-White spring practice game as the Red team sneaked by the Whites, 18-14.

As the Razorback story had been all year, the Hogs were again underdogs. Never had such a light but fast team thrilled a crowd — ever expecting the spectacular play which had become a Razorback trademark.

The entire first quarter was Georgia Tech’s. Arkansas ran one series of downs and kicked, being unable to move the ball. Tech scored on quarterback Tibbitt’s option, keeping the ball for 52 yards and the go ahead score. Tailoring 7-0, the Hogs swapped kicks and then started to move. Jim Monroe, his battered jersey flapping in the breeze, engineered the drive while the Big Red line cleared the way. Alberty crashed over from the one and Akers’ kick was good to tie the score at halftime.

In the third quarter, the Razorbacks were again on the move. Jim Mooty showed his speed and determination by picking up most of the yardage. Arkansas’ All-American halfback burst through the Tech defenders at the Engineer’s 19 yard line and spun and dodged Harris combined with the entire Razorback team highlighted the rest of the game. With Tech filling the air with desperation passes the clock ran out and the Hogs had their first Gator Bowl victory. Mooty was the leading ground gainer with 99 yards and was named the game’s outstanding player.

It was a perfect ending for the ninth ranked team in the nation.

Joe Paul Alberty (65) scores the first Arkansas touchdown on a fake pitch-out to halfback Alworth (23). Mooty (24) led the way with fine blocking.
