Alternative Education

Access to education is a right, not a privilege. Education systems need to provide inclusive settings with opportunities for young people to learn and develop in ways that recognise and respond to their diverse strengths, backgrounds, learning styles and individual needs. The school leaving age in the ACT is 15 years.

There are many reasons why a young person may have difficulties at school such as poverty, family difficulties, health, and social and environmental factors. It’s important to support young people, their families and schools to find solutions to these barriers. Suspension or exclusion from school may not be the best response and could lead to further exclusion and isolation of a young person.

It’s the responsibility of workers and the community to know and action young people’s rights. Workers need to be aware of young people’s rights in education and support them to stay in mainstream education where possible.

In this section you’ll find:
- Tips on supporting young people in transitioning to alternative education;
- Alternative education services; and
- A contact list of additional alternative education services.

The following sections also contain alternative education resources: Aboriginal and Torres Strait Islander; Employment and Training; Health and Sexual Health; Multicultural; Youth Centres; Youth Support and Youth Support in Secondary Schools.

Ways of Working

Supporting Young People in Transitioning to Alternative Education

Supporting Young People in Transitioning to Alternative Education

Entering alternative education can cause significant changes and upheaval for young people and may also be accompanied by other issues, such as a history of negative education experiences, associated feelings of failure, fear or insecurity, as well as outside issues. Planning for transition into alternative education is a process that can help young people prepare and work towards achieving their future directions and goals. Workers can assist young people to develop a transition plan.

Transition planning is a process that:
- Promotes a smooth transition to alternative education;
- Is empowering;
- Maximises choices;
- Informs decision making; and
- Provides direction and purpose.

Transition planning is not a single event or meeting. It should start early to allow the young person to plan for a smooth and successful transition to alternative education.
In collaboration and partnership with family and other support people, young people should be encouraged and supported to play a leading role in their own transition planning. The questions below help explore key issues when developing an individual transition plan with a young person.

1. Identify and work towards the outcomes and goals the young person wants to achieve from the education program.

   - Why do I want to study? What are my expectations?
   - What do I want to achieve?
   - What direction might I like to take in the future?
   - What programs are around that I might be able to participate in?

2. Identify the changes and challenges this may have for the young person, and strategies to help cope with these.

   - Why didn’t it work for me last time?
   - What type of program best suits my current lifestyle?
   - What might have to change in my current lifestyle?
   - How much will it cost?

3. Identify people that will support the young person to achieve their outcomes and goals in alternative education.

   - What support do I need from other people?
     - Do I need help with transport to and from the program?
     - Do I need help with the cost of the program?
     - What if I need to talk to someone about problems I might be having with the program or its impact on my life?
   - Who can help support me with these things?
