Additional input was gathered via feedback from distribution of the proposed school social worker job description draft at meetings, at the NCSSWA Fall Conference, via e-mail listservs to school personnel and through posting the job description on the DPI/LEARN NC School Social Work web page. The revised job description is to be presented to the State Board of Education for consideration and action.

Purpose and Background

This document is intended for use by North Carolina schools and local education agencies which employ school social workers. The 2006 North Carolina School Social Worker Job Description represents a revision of the 1987 North Carolina School Social Worker Job Description. In developing the 2006 job description, a variety of documents and relevant State policies and statutes were consulted including the North Carolina Standards for the Preparation of School Social Workers approved by the State Board of Education on November 3, 2005; State Board of Education Policy QP-C-006; State Board of Education
Priorities; State General Statute 115C-333; current North Carolina educational staff job descriptions and evaluation systems; the National Association of Social Work Standards for School Social Work; and select pages from the Wisconsin Department of Public Instruction School Social Work Practice Guide.

Role of the School Social Worker

School social work celebrated its one hundredth anniversary in 2006. Social work services in schools first began independently in New York City, Chicago, Boston, and Hartford during the school year of 1906-1907 to meet the social service needs of children and to improve communication between the home and school. The first board of education to initiate and finance a school social work program was in Rochester, New York, in 1913 (Shaffer, 2006).

During this century of school social work, school social workers have grown significantly in numbers and the focus of the service has changed in response to important influences of the times. A focus on school attendance in the early 1900’s showed the need for professionals who understood the influences of living conditions, socioeconomic status, poor health, family and community on academic performance, behavior, and attendance at school (Shaffer, 2006). The foremost responsibility of the school social worker at that time was home-school-community liaison. Although school social work has evolved considerably with the dynamic changes of society and school social workers function as change-agents more so than ever before, school social workers today continue to serve as the vital link between home, school and community.

In order to be a licensed school social worker in North Carolina, one has to complete a bachelor’s or master’s degree in social work from a Council on Social Work Education (CSWE) accredited program with additional specialized preparation in school social work. Within these school social work education programs, several standards are studied such as the foundations of school social work practice, assessment and evaluation, cultural diversity, consultative and collaborative relationships and understanding of the role of advocacy and facilitation. Also required are intervention strategies to support student development, discernment of statutes and case law and completion of a school social work internship comprising of a minimum of 400 contact hours in a school setting.

School social workers are expected to apply their professional training in schools in order to support student success. Their capacity to influence student success is clearly influenced by school social worker-student ratios (No Child Left Behind recommends one-school-social-worker-to-800-students ratio; the School Social Work Association of America recommends one master’s-degreed social worker per 400 students). Through specialized school social work programs that strengthen the home/school/community partnership and address barriers to student learning, school social workers serve as catalysts in promoting student wellbeing and successful completion of school. This job description is a guide for the implementation of such specialized school social work programs in the public schools of North Carolina.

According to the National Mental Health Association, fewer than one in five of the 17.5 million children in need of mental health services actually receive them. Many of these are students who will not achieve academic success due to social, emotional and behavioral problems affecting school performance. School social workers help these students through early identification, prevention, intervention, counseling and support.
