Session 2: 2030: California’s Plans for the Next Phase of Greenhouse Gas Reduction
California is on pace to meet its AB 32 target of reducing greenhouse gas emissions to 1990 levels by 2020. But scientists call for even greater reductions beyond that year to avert the worst impacts of climate change, reducing emissions a further 80% by 2050. 2030 is the next key milestone on the way to achieving this ambitious goal. This panel will examine the key policy options and tradeoffs for pathways to the state’s 2030 emission reduction goals.
Moderator Ethan Elkind, Associate Director, Climate Change and Business Program, University of California-Berkeley/UCLA, Berkeley
Panelists
John Laird, Secretary, Natural Resources Agency, Sacramento
Mary Nichols, Chairman, California Air Resources Board, Sacramento
Carla Peterman, Commissioner, California Public Utilities Commission
Cliff Rechtschaffen, Senior Advisor to the Governor, Sacramento

Richard Corey is an Executive Officer for the California Air Resources Board. He has 28 years of professional experience in the air pollution field with more than 20 years of that experience in a management capacity at ARB. Before his appointment as Executive Officer, he served as Deputy Executive Officer and Chief of the Stationary Source Division. Corey oversees the team responsible for a broad range of programs including those concerning fuels, climate, incentives, and air toxics. Key programs have included the low carbon fuel standard, cap-and-trade regulation, and measures and incentives to reduce emissions from a variety of goods movement sources, including port trucking, transport refrigeration units, cargo handling operations, maritime operations, rail-related goods movement.

Alex Wang is Assistant Professor of Law at the University of California Los Angeles. His primary research and teaching interests are in environmental law, Chinese law, comparative law, and torts. Wang was a senior attorney for the Natural Resources Defense Council (NRDC) based in Beijing and the founding director of NRDC’s China Environmental Law and Governance Project for nearly six years. He has worked with China’s government agencies, legal community, and environmental groups to improve environmental rule of law and strengthen the role of the public in environmental protection. Wang helped to establish NRDC’s Beijing office in 2006, was a Fulbright Fellow to China, and an attorney at the law firm of Simpson Thacher & Bartlett LLP in New York City. He is a regular speaker on issues related to China and environmental protection.
Friday, October 17 | 9:15-10:45 am | 1.5 Hours MCLE
Session 3: The View From In-House: The Unique Challenges Facing Environmental In-House Counsel, and the Tools and Techniques Used to Resolve Legal Issues within a Corporation

Practicing environmental law as in house counsel for a corporation presents a unique set of challenges requiring a different skill set than practicing for a government entity, non-profit organization, or private law firm. In house counsel often have to juggle multiple priorities and pull together diverse interests within the company in order to facilitate consensus. And, in addition to providing sound legal advice, in house counsel strive to present solutions that are aligned with the business interests of the company. In house counsel must also respond to near term situations (e.g., spills and other accidents) while considering the long-term implications for the company of taking a position on an issue and the precedent set by the outcome. Permeating all of these activities is the need to effectively, efficiently and economically use outside counsel and internal resources. Partnering with outside counsel is often critical to achieving successful outcomes for the company. This panel will include experienced environmental attorneys from three different corporations who will discuss their experiences, offer thoughts on key challenges, and consider how the role of in house counsel (and the external counsel they engage) is evolving over time.

Session 5: Where the Rubber Meets the Road: Reducing Emissions From Goods Movement

California’s trucks, trains, and ships support a $230 billion manufacturing industry and 40% of the country’s imports, making goods movement a key economic driver for the state. At the same time, California’s freight sector is the largest contributor to smog-forming nitrogen oxides pollution, and a major source of carbon dioxide and black carbon. A growing body of research shows that California’s attainment of federal air quality standards and state greenhouse gas emission reduction goals will require a fundamental transformation in the way we move goods in this state. Daunting as the task may seem, the state is developing far-reaching policies to overhaul the transportation system for local and foreign commodities and must eventually make these policies translate to real action. This panel will explore whether and how California will embrace the challenge.

Friday, October 17 | 11:00 am-12:30 pm | 1.5 Hours MCLE
Session 6: Ch-Ch-Changes: Contingency, Cumulative Risk, and Climate Change Adaptation

California’s climate change adaptation strategy reflects the growing recognition among scientists and policy-makers that despite progress in reducing greenhouse gas emissions, climate change will continue to produce dramatic transformations. These changes will add to the strain on coastal ecosystems, which must also come to terms with a wide variety of other cumulative risks. And throughout California, climate change tests the ability of laws and legal institutions to address contingencies. The present year has been a very active one for climate adaptation planning, including the release of a draft Safeguarding California plan, the improvement of planning tools, and the convening of state and local officials and scientists for the California Adaptation Forum. But are California’s laws and institutions sufficiently resilient to make effective use of these tools in time to matter? In this panel, some of California’s leading experts in the law, science and policy of climate change adaptation discuss the present state of adaptation, and the challenges ahead.

Session 7: Knock, Knock, Knocking on Office Doors: A “How-To Guide” to Responding to Environmental Enforcement Agency Investigations

Every regulated company has anxiety about unanticipated facility inspection by agencies such as EPA, the State, local air and water districts. Compliance managers dread responding to information requests and subpoenas. And corporate officers have nightmares about enforcement officers showing up at the door with a warrant. This panel will provide practical advice about how to respond when environmental agencies initiate investigations, and offer suggestions for best practices to implement before investigations occur. The panel will also address the scope of agencies’ ability to access information (facilities, documents and people), the obligations and legal rights of responding parties, and recommended best practices for responding to agency investigation techniques, including on-site inspections, information requests, subpoenas, invitations to negotiate, and document requests. Other subjects of discussion will include asserting claims of privilege, handling confidential business information, and understanding differences between civil and criminal rights and obligations.

Session 8: 2015: Expansion of Cap-and-Trade to Cover the Transportation Sector

Emissions from burning fuels in the transportation sector account for 38 percent of California’s greenhouse gas emissions. Under state law, cap and trade expands in 2015 to include emissions from these fuels. The California Air Resources Board has been under pressure from oil companies, airlines, and the trucking industry to exempt these fuels in favor of a “fuels tax” or delay expansion, but unless state law is changed, the 2015 expansion looks inevitable. This panel will cover the new requirements, the likely impact on fuel prices and the interplay with the markets for carbon allowances and low carbon fuel standard credits.

Session 11: The Human Right to Water: Can Safe Drinking Water Finally Flow to Disadvantaged Communities?
California’s water resources law recognizes important protections for the general public, from the public trust doctrine to the recent legislation of a human right to safe, clean, affordable and accessible drinking water. Yet in 2014, California’s communities with the most severe water shortages, mostly rural and low income, still face daunting challenges attempting to secure safe drinking water even with increased state attention. The challenges include contamination and constraints on supply, as well as financial, regulatory and organizational hurdles. This panel explores the evolving relationship of water rights and basic human rights to requirements for provision of safe drinking water, particularly in times of scarcity.

Chemical spills produce costs beyond obvious ones, such as penalties, mitigation expenses, and cleanup obligations. Less obvious costs include personal injury claims, property damage claims, negative publicity and public outrage, and non-regulatory investigations. Spills may also increase regulatory scrutiny and result in modified legal obligations. This panel will explore methods for responding to such chemical spills and releases, including what can be done before, during and after such incidents. The panel will also discuss legal obligations and practical considerations in preparing for, responding to and recovering from these events, and a review of federal and state requirements on planning and preparedness, response, reporting and recordkeeping. Beyond compliance, the panel will discuss best practices for preparing for and recovering from the fallout.

After more than 30 years of interpretation of the nature and scope of the Comprehensive Environmental, Response, Compensation, and Liability Act (CERCLA), the easy cases and obvious issues largely are resolved. But complex historical sites with few (if any) obvious and solvent potentially responsible parties (PRPs) remain to be addressed, raising new and complicated questions about CERCLA's application. The panel will explore hot topics and trends in CERCLA litigation and enforcement, focusing on situations that arguably are at the margin of CERCLA's intended scope. For example, panelists may discuss: the scope and nature of recent natural resource damage claims; tricky issues when the government is involved, either as a PRP (e.g., at Department of Defense sites) or when prosecuting claims under sections 107 or 113 (e.g., when acting as a private litigant); the potential for and problems with trans boundary claims under CERCLA; whether under recent jurisprudence there is ever a case for apportionment of a complex site; and, whether and when air pollution falls under CERCLA.

The U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and the California Department of Fish and Wildlife have been focused on regional planning efforts to avoid “postcode stamp” conservation efforts. This panel will explore the logistics of regional planning under the Endangered Species Act and the Natural Communities Conservation Planning Act, focusing on difficulties associated with creating an overall plan involving multiple parties and activities. Examples include the Santa Clara Valley Habitat Conservation Plan, the Desert Renewable Energy Conservation Plan, and the Bay Delta Conservation Plan. This panel will also discuss “one-stop shop” models for regional planning efforts, which streamline project permitting within the plan area to cover Endangered Species Act take authorization along with other permits. Examples include the East Contra Costa County Habitat Conservation Plan and the Placer County Conservation Plan. Other complexities of large-scale planning efforts, will also be addressed, including overlap of large plan areas with those addressed in other plans and inconsistencies in the requirements for and availability of mitigation lands.

Session 16: The Promise and Pitfalls of Regional Planning for Special-Status Species

In July 2014, EPA Region 9 issued its trichloroethylene (TCE) recommendations memorandum, which establishes short-term TCE exposure levels from vapor intrusion at residential and commercial/industrial properties at federal Superfund sites in Region 9, and sets forth recommended “accelerated” and “urgent” response actions. EPA had earlier issued vapor intrusion “guidelines” in December 2013 through a letter to the Regional Water Quality Control Board—San Francisco Region. The diverse experts on this panel—an environmental consultant and representatives of federal and state agencies and commercial property owners—will discuss these developments. The panel will provide general background on vapor intrusion and mitigation measures, while also addressing the controversy over the scientific study relied upon by EPA to support the short-term TCE exposure levels, the techniques agencies are using to implement the new TCE recommendations and guidelines, and concerns of owners and tenants regarding implementation of response actions.

Session 17: Vapor Intrusion – Coming to a Property Near You

In January Governor Brown declared an emergency and described it as “perhaps the worst drought California has ever seen…” In May the State Water Resources Control Board began sending notices to post-1913 permit holders informing them of the need to stop diverting surface water. In June the National Climatic Data Center said that California was “enduring its hottest year on record …” And as of July the Sierra snowpack was largely gone as California finished its driest 12 months since the 1920s. Just how bad is it, and will it get even worse? The panel will provide historical perspective, and will discuss the legal, political and financial tools available to deal with the current drought; what’s working and what isn’t; who’s suing whom to try to get a badly-needed share of available water; and whether or not the environment must inevitably suffer at the hands of Mother Nature and human decisions.

The Environmental Law Section is honored to present its inaugural Lifetime Achievement Award to the late Professor Joseph L. Sax, a true pioneer in the development of environmental law and our great friend. Professor Sax was the principal voice behind the modern application of the public trust doctrine to the protection of natural resources, and a renowned expert on water, endangered species, and regulatory takings law. As a teacher, he has been a mentor and inspiration to many of us, and as an author of works such as Mountains without Handrails and Playing Darts with a Rembrandt, his influence is wider still. Joe Sax holds a very special place in both our hearts and minds.

He has brought a collaborative, problem-solving focus to the City Attorney’s office, emphasizing quality of life improvements in L.A.’s neighborhoods. Feuer previously served as the Majority Policy Leader of the California Assembly and Chair of the Assembly’s Judiciary Committee, writing many of California’s most important public safety, children’s health, transportation, consumer protection and environmental laws. A champion for senior citizens, Feuer served as Executive Director of Bet Tzedek Legal Services, one of the nation’s leading public interest law firms. He has received many awards for his achievements for seniors, children, environmental protection, and more. Feuer has taught at the UCLA School of Law and the UCLA School of Public Affairs. He practiced law at two prominent firms, Hufstedler, Miller, Carlson & Beardsley and Morrison & Foerster, and was a commentator on NPR member station KPCC. He began his career as a judicial clerk for California Supreme Court Justice Joseph Grodin.

Bill McKibben’s website describes him as an “author and environmentalist,” which is a bit like describing the Beatles as a band. His 1989 book The End of Nature is regarded as the first book for a general audience about climate change, and has appeared in 24 languages. He is founder of 350.org, the first planet-wide, grassroots climate change movement. The author of more than a dozen acclaimed books and the 2013 winner of the Gandhi Prize and the Thomas Merton Prize, he holds honorary degrees from 18 colleges and universities; Foreign Policy named him to their inaugural list of the world’s 100 most important global thinkers, and the Boston Globe said he was “probably America’s most important environmentalist.” A former staff writer for the New Yorker, and he writes frequently for a wide variety of publications including the New York Review of Books, National Geographic, and Rolling Stone. He lives in the mountains above Lake Champlain with his wife, the writer Sue Halpern.

Session 22: Media Coverage in Environmental Cases

This panel gets beyond “no comment” to address how the media covers environmental issues and how attorneys can and should work with reporters to deal with adverse news or to get media coverage for an issue or matter important to your client. When dealing with a crisis, taking time to speak with a reporter may seem like the last thing an attorney wants to do, but the story is going to be written with or without an attorney’s input, it is often in a client’s interest to take the call. Likewise, when your clients are interested in getting more of their message out or bringing more attention to a topic or development, media - whether traditional news or social media - is instrumental. This panel will examine how lawyers can effectively prepare and work with reporters and other media to get their message across and avoid damaging clients’ interests.

David Pettit, Natural Resources Defense Council, Los Angeles

Panelists

Chris Austin, Founder and Writer, Maven’s Notebook, Canyon Country
Sean Rossall, Vice President/Media Relations and Crisis Communication, Cerrell Associates, Los Angeles

Session 23: Where’s the Line?: Ethical Tensions Between Public Disclosure, Our Duties as Lawyers, and Constitutional Rights

Unique ethical issues confront lawyers practicing administrative law in the land use entitlement and environmental enforcement contexts. Whether representing a public agency, a property owner, or another interested party such as an environmental group, union, neighbor, or neighborhood group, lawyers have ethical duties to clients. Public agencies also must comply with open records and meetings laws as well as other laws designed to further transparency. Real parties and interested parties have Constitutional rights to petition government, yet concerns about ex parte communications and undue influence sometimes restrict such outreach. This panel will outline the framework of these potentially competing rights and responsibilities, discuss how recent appellate cases highlight the tension between these various duties, and consider strategies to balance these issues without running afoul of our ethical responsibilities as attorneys.

Session 24: Overtapped Aquifers: Will California Manage its Groundwater?

Unlike other Western states, California does not have a state program to regulate groundwater extractions, and there is no requirement for local regulation, although groundwater is managed in some areas of the State through adjudication decree or local programs. Some of the largest basins are not managed at all, and are subject to long-term overdraft. Problems including declining water tables, subsidence, and saline water intrusion are matters of increasing concern. The State’s Water Action Plan proposes to provide local agencies the authority necessary to sustainably manage groundwater, and that where local agencies fail to make sufficient progress, the state should step in. This panel will review recent developments and long term prospects for groundwater management in California, focusing on what authority local agencies need, and what form state intervention might take. Will California manage its groundwater, or pump until the well runs dry?

Moderator
Andy Sawyer, Assistant Chief Counsel, State Water Resources Control Board, Sacramento

Gordon Burns, Undersecretary for Environmental Protection, California Environmental Protection Agency, Sacramento
Maurice Hall, Ph.D. P.E., Water Science and Engineering Lead, California Water Program, The Nature Conservancy, Sacramento

Session 25: The Environmental Movement Is Not a Restricted Club: Changing the Face of Environmentalism

Communities of color often bear a disproportionate share of environmental burdens, and studies confirm that people of color rank environmental issues high among social concerns. Nonetheless, there are still relatively few people of color in the “mainstream” environmental movement. This panel will explore the opportunities and challenges in engaging communities of color in mainstream environmental advocacy; whether the perceived divide between “mainstream” environmentalism and “environmental justice” is hindering the effectiveness of both movements; and how to broaden the concept of “environmentalism” to recognize the work of grassroots organizations and advocates. Following the panel presentation, audience members will be invited to exchange ideas about where to go from here.

Moderator
Antonette Cordero, Deputy Attorney General, California Department of Justice, Los Angeles

Panelists
Adriano Martinez, Staff Attorney, Earthjustice, Los Angeles

Session 26: What’s Fair and Foul in Environmental Baseline Analysis?

This advanced panel discussion will explore questions regarding the appropriate baselines for environmental review under the California and federal environmental laws. How do downturns in the economy, drought years, and climate change impact the selection of the baseline? Should the baseline include illegal activities associated with projects or programs? Can agencies use a future baseline? Does the baseline differ for ongoing projects or programs? How should agencies handle scientific uncertainty or conflicting information? The panelists will explain how the answers to these questions differ depending on whether the environmental document involves the ESA, CESA, NEPA, or CEQA. The panelists will also discuss possible approaches for reconciling conflicts between these statutes for joint documents.

Sunday, October 19 | 11:00 am-12:30 pm | 1.5 Hours MCLE

This year marks the 40th anniversary of one of the most important and underappreciated pieces of energy legislation: California’s Warren-Alquist Act. This panel will review the Act’s creation of the California Energy Commission, and its pioneering work on one-stop permitting processes; energy conservation standards for buildings and appliances; and energy demand forecasting. The panel will also address current issues and concerns regarding traditional and renewable power plant proposals under consideration by the CEC, the controversial Electric Program Investment Charge, and the other programs affecting the mix and ratepayer rights in California, including programs involving energy storage and alternative fuels and vehicles.

SCHOLARSHIP INFORMATION

Application Available Online (only)
The State Bar Environmental Law Section is pleased to offer the Michael H. Remy Scholarship. In his nearly thirty years of private practice, Michael Remy represented a wide variety of public and private clients as well as nonprofit organizations. Remy assisted large corporations and small entrepreneurs alike in various permitting and environmental matters throughout the state. Many counties, cities, and special districts relied on Remy’s counsel in the processing, environmental review, and litigation of large and small projects. Some of his most notable environmental accomplishments were: heading the successful political and legal efforts to shut down the Rancho Seco Nuclear Power Plant; and representing the Sierra Club and William Hewlett against the conversion of Shirley Canyon to a commercial ski run by the Squaw Valley Ski Corporation. In 1990, the Environmental Council of Sacramento named Remy “Environmentalist of the Year.” Remy was widely admired and loved by his colleagues, friends and family, who regarded him as a man of extraordinary intelligence, personal integrity, kindness, and generosity. Remy’s warm presence is sorely missed by everyone at Remy Moose Manley, LLP, but even in his absence, his memory continues to provide guidance and inspiration.

This scholarship, sponsored by Remy Moose Manley, LLP in memory of former Environmental Law Section member and advisor, Michael H. Remy, includes tuition, travel and room for the 2014 Environmental Law Conference at Yosemite®. There are up to five (5) scholarships of this type available, which is designed primarily, though not exclusively, for law students.

Tuition-Only Scholarships The Environmental Law Section plans to offer at least 20 tuition-only scholarships to attend the 2014 Environmental Law Conference at Yosemite®.

Scholarship Criteria The Scholarship Committee will review all applications received by the deadline of August 21, 2014. Scholarships will be awarded based on the following considerations: Financial Need; Environmental Law Interest (for Students); Environmental Law Practice (for practitioners and other environmental law professionals); and Environmental Law Section Membership & Support (for practitioners and other environmental law professionals).
