No Sweat! Taking the Stress out of Conversations with Friends
Many girls my age like to chat or have brief conversations with each other. Most girls like to talk to each other in the hallway, on the playground, in the cafeteria, in P.E. and other places.
Friends talk to each other for enjoyment. It is fun to share your thoughts and feelings with other people. It feels good to have someone listen to what you have to say.
When girls my age talk to each other they usually chat about the same topic for several minutes.

It isn’t always easy remembering to stay on the same topic. Lots of people have to work at staying on topic during a conversation.

Hmm. The other girls were talking about clothes and I wanted to talk about the weather.
When friends are having a conversation they are careful not to interrupt the person they are talking to. They know that if they interrupt, the other person may not want to continue talking with them.
If someone is talking to a friend and the friend interrupts them, or changes the topic, they may think that the person doesn’t care about what they have to say.
Staying on topic while talking with friends and not interrupting others while talking is an intelligent, friendly thing to do.
