Non-psychotic conditions, especially depressive illness and anxiety are common during pregnancy and postpartum and have been shown to affect the infant’s mental health and have longstanding effects on the child’s emotional, social and cognitive development (JCP-MH, 2012). Serious perinatal psychiatric disorder is associated with an increased risk of suicide, and is a leading cause of maternal mortality (Oates & Cantwell, 2011). Perinatal mental health problems are a major public health concern and have impacts on both maternal and infant mental and physical health (JCP-MH, 2012).
