The ships come sailing in...

The Nina, a replica of Christopher Columbus' ship, arrived along with the Pinta (not pictured) at Green Turtle Bay Marina in Grand Rivers Thursday afternoon. The ships tour together as a sailing museum to educate the public and school children about the "caravel," a Portuguese ship used by Columbus and many early explorers. Both ships will be in port until Sept. 11 and open for self-guided tours every day from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. The prices are $8 for adults, $7 for seniors and $6 for students.

After trip to Mexico, Trump pulls about-face on immigration policy...

He was measured and soft-spoken, almost deferential as he read carefully off prepared notes. Within hours, Trump wiped it all away. In a lengthy and fiery address on immigration in Phoenix, the Republican nominee said in no uncertain terms that Mexico would indeed pay for his border wall. He lambasted millions of illegal immigrants as "criminals and a drain on the U.S. government. And he vowed that no person living in the United States illegally could chart a path to pay for the wall he's pledged to build along the U.S-Mexico border.

UPS pilots say OK to labor deal, shower of cash

BY GRACE SCHNEIDER

LOUISVILLE — UPS and its pilots union announced Wednesday that the pilots had overwhelmingly approved a three-year labor agreement.

An estimated 91 percent backed the deal that includes hefty pay raises, enhanced pension benefits and signing bonuses, in favor of retroactive pay, for those remaining in the cockpit.

The president of the Independent Pilots Association, Robert Travis, said in a statement that “the pilot-sticking point — pilot scheduling — should be addressed and the company and pilots agreed to provisions to address concerns about rest time for pilots between flights.”

UPS Airlines President Brendan Cannon called the settlement "a win-win contract offer." Together, we have succeeded in taking care of both our people’s needs and our business objectives.”

Key terms include:

- A 14.67 percent salary increase, and 5 percent annual wage increases over the contract term, for a compounded increase of slightly over 20 percent.
- Signing bonuses of $650,000 for captains and $450,000 for first officers.
- A 40 percent increase in the pension plan.
- Crew rest enhancements, including reduced duty period limits for overnight and international flights; additional sleep facilities at major gateways; and sleep modules in UPS Boeing 767 aircraft.
- That includes a commitment by UPS to work with the IPA in applying the latest in fatigue science to pilot scheduling.

Travis said that the IPA will continue to advocate for cargo’s inclusion into duty rotation, and will now applicably only to passenger flying.

“Our advocacy for one level of aviation safety continues,” he added.

The deal, which is headquartered on Fern Valley Road and is expected to be voted on by more than 90 percent of the association membership, could take effect as early as Oct. 1, 2021. The contract covers 21,770 pilots.

UPS just broke ground on a $350 million expansion to its Louisville ground shipping hub near Fairdale.

Middle class takes hit on health care costs

Obamacare, like most good government deeds, was supposed to help the middle class. There were Medicaid expansions and subsidies to help those on the lower rungs of the income scale obtain health care coverage. But more generally the promise was that President Obama and the congressional Democrats who were throughly flummoxed by the ACA without a single Republican vote was that the law would lower the cost of health insurance for the masses.

Specifically, President Obama promised lower premiums by up to $8,290 for a typical family per year. Older Americans have seen this act before. Most of them well know that when politicians promise to help the middle class, the middle class is the last to get left behind. And that has occurred again with the ACA.

A story last Friday in the Wall Street Journal spells out the details. The article reports an analysis of middle class spending between 2007 and 2014 and how the Obama-friendly Brookings Institution misleads. The study looks at middle-income families spending on basic needs, and how their spending on health care rose by just shy of 25 percent over the seven years.

Given the wage stagnation that has been a persistent problem in the Obama years, that means something has to give, and the study finds this to be true. Families spent 7.6 percent more for food — both at home and in restaurants — during the period. Spending on housing fell 6 percent, transportation spending fell 6.4 percent and clothing purchases dropped a whopping 8.8 percent.

Those figures explain a lot of the current moribund U.S. economy. The WSJ says that since 2000 health care spending has grown from 13.3 percent to 18.2 percent of the total domestic economy. But over that time the mix of who pays has changed, with much more of the cost shifting to the middle class.

Specifically, middle class families are paying much greater portions of their health care costs out of their own pockets, even as those costs are rapidly escalating. (That is why) the failure promised of Obamacare. The law was supposed to rein in the rate of growth of health care spending by providing more primary care and preventive medicine. This has not materialized.

The reason for greater out-of-pocket expenses is that far from lowering the cost of coverage, insurance premiums have been soaring under the ACA. Private employers, who still provide coverage for the population under age 65, have to raise deductibles and co-pays and/or offer bare-bones alternative plans to keep premiums within reach for workers. Those without employer coverage are at the mercy of the Obamacare exchanges. The problem is far worse. Bernie Sanders is currently a brat. The Kaiser Family Foundation reported this week that people in one-third of U.S. counties with Medicare, the only insurance option on the Obamacare exchanges in 2017. Major private insurers, stung by billions in losses, are abandoning the program en masse.

It is a quite a political irony that Hillary Clinton will likely win the 2016 presidential election except by promising more of the same, given the damage the ACA has inflicted. But that is a topic for another day. For the time being, let’s hope the(Repeat disruptions) continue. Beware of politicians bearing gifts.

Settlement tactic mere lawlessness

WASHINGTON — Because truth in labeling laws are among the laws from which Washington always exempts, the titles of congressional legislation often take liberties with the facts (e.g., “the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act”). The Stop Student Stabilization Funds Act, however, precisely names the silencing for which it is the remedy.

The Justice Department has negotiated “bank settlement agreements” whereby banks make redress to the government for the damage they allegedly did in connection with the creation and sale of residential mortgage-backed securities in the subprime mortgage crisis. Our subject here is not, however, how the sums extracted from the banks ($16.65 billion, Bank of America $6.1 billion, Citigroup $7 billion, JPMorgan $3.8 billion) are proportionate to their alleged culpability. Rather, our subject is what that money boils down to.

Insurance companies have spent at least $13 billion on lawsuit settlements and fees related to “the careful constitutional design of the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act” (e.g., the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act).

The current president relies on dubious arguments that the careful constitutional design of the Supreme Court majority’s 2012 decision that the health care law was constitutional is inherently unconstitutional. If the American economy is to be given a chance to be the next president.

This year brought in more than $33,000, raising awareness of the need for services for children of western Kentucky that have been abused or neglected. Paul, land and sea, is not without its legal challenges. While Trump and his administration have been praised for their efforts to roll back regulations, some have criticized the president for not doing enough to protect the environment. Trump has called for a “rigorous regulatory review” to ensure that regulations are not “overly burdensome” or “costly” to businesses. Some environmentalists have accused the administration of undermining the Clean Water Act and rolling back other environmental protections.

When it comes to the economy, Paul’s focus is on limited government and a return to basic principles. He has argued for lower taxes, reduced government spending, and a balanced budget. He has also called for a strong military and the protection of American jobs and industries.

But Paul’s political career has not been without its challenges. His vocal opposition to certain policies, such as the Iraq War, has caused him to be at odds with some of his colleagues in the Republican Party. His independent streak and willingness to speak his mind have also led to clashes with other political figures.

Despite these challenges, Paul remains a force to be reckoned with in American politics. His commitment to limited government and his willingness to challenge the status quo have made him a popular figure among many Americans.
SpaceX launch pad explosion for Facebook’s internet plan

By Marcia Dunn

CAPE CANAVERAL, Fla. — A massive fireball and explosion erupted Thursday at SpaceX’s main launch pad, destroying its new rocket engine test.

SpaceX chief Elon Musk said the accident occurred while the rocket was being fueled and oriented around the upper-stage oxygen tank.

The explosion — heard as a loud boom for miles around — dealt a severe blow to SpaceX’s mission of sending people to Mars.

In a Twitter message Musk said the accident occurred while the rocket was being fueled and oriented around the upper-stage oxygen tank.

SpaceX was preparing to test firing of its unmanned Falcon rocket when it happened shortly after 4 p.m. at Cape Canaveral Air Force Station. The test was in advance of S yearly planned launch of an Israeli-made communications satellite to provide home Internet service to sub-Saharan Africa, the Middle East, and the Americas.

A video of the explosion shows a fireball enveloping the tip of the rocket. Moments later, the now-corrupt satellite plunged back to Earth, incinerating by more explosions.

Buildings for miles away shook from the blast. Musk said the explosion continued for several minutes. Dark clouds of smoke filled the sky.

A half-hour later, thick black cloud hung low over the eastern horizon.

Video cameras showed the rocket coming from the restricted site well into late morning. Most of the rocket was still standing — although the top third or so was clearly severed.

The explosion occurred at Launch Complex 39A, the Air Force Space Launch Complex that houses the massive NASA/ Kennedy Space Center, where emergency staff went on standby and monitored the air filters for any toxic fumes. The initial blast sent NASA employees running outside to see what happened. The Air Force stropped the nearby town of Cape Canaveral for public safety in the surrounding area.

While the pad was still being assessed for damage, numerous USAF helicopters were called to the site. In recent weeks, the military has been called to other sites.

“Everyone should stay away from the area near the pad for the next few days,” Musk said. “There is no threat to our rocketry. The test was a failure and we have no problems on the way to Mars.”

The accident was being fueled and oriented around the upper-stage oxygen tank.

Social stigma remains mental health obstacle

School has started and the ones who need to learn about mental health are revealing that we are falling more and more into society.

Faith teachers, administrators, counselors, school psychologists, and parents believe mental health awareness.

According to a recent National Teacher Survey, 80 percent of the students who have mental issues.

Along with the timeliness of National Suicide Prevention Day, the next week is National Suicide Prevention Week. Let's open our minds to the need of mental health awareness and support for our students to help.

My daughter had the idea. One simple change would be letting kids know that mental health is just as important as their physical health. We expect them to feed us and go to school, but we don't tell them they have a brain and that their feelings are real. As long as they have a pain in their back, but when they have pain in their heart? Don't be afraid to tell them. Let them feel inside even if they look okay on the outside. You don't have to say, "OK not to feel OK." It's OK to talk about it and tell someone.

A way we can help kids is to have regular, open discussions about the emotional issues are nothing new, but it's a good stop using phrases that make us feel bad. We all have them. Let's all talk about them. We need to be described as someone as crazy as another.

Another thing to look at is our religious communities, so pejoratively terms, say "I'll kill myself," "I want to die," or "I can't live.

Are they serious? No, probably not. "Normalizing" something means to make it seem normal. We do this all the time. We want our young people to stop using phrases that are so close to making them look like they are ashamed of is to open the doors of discussion about mental health issues.
