1. Overview

It is critical that social sector organizations familiarize themselves with relevant employment laws that affect their employees and their organization. Often social sector organizations begin with like-minded persons informally coming together for the purpose of addressing a challenging social problem. However, regardless of the ties that bind those who work together on a social mission, the social sector organization must comply with applicable employment laws and implement relevant policies and procedures.

The following provides an overview of federal and Michigan employment laws that could apply to social sector organizations and their employees located in Michigan. This overview does not provide a complete and comprehensive analysis of all potentially applicable employment laws in Michigan and the U.S., and employment decisions should not be made without specific legal advice based on particular factual situations. Employment laws can differ greatly by state; if your organization and employees are located in another state, you should consult the employment law pages of LawForChange™ for that state.
2. General Issues

a. At Will Employment

The conventional relationship between an employer and an employee hired for an indefinite period of time is called “employment at will.” Under this arrangement, either the employer or the employee may terminate the employment relationship at any time, with or without cause, and with or without advance notice. In the absence of a written contract or other evidence indicating that an employee may be terminated only “for cause,” employment in Michigan is presumed to be at will.

When an employment relationship is at will, the employer has the right to terminate the employee for a good reason, a bad reason or no reason at all. However, it is important to remember that there are a number of laws, many of which are identified and discussed below, that prevent employers from firing any employee, whether at will or not, for illegal reasons (e.g., discriminatory reasons, whistleblowing, or engaging in certain activities protected by law).

b. Temporary Employment and Consulting Relationships

In addition to traditional permanent employees, many employers may use the services of temporary employees, independent contractors, or consultants (and employees of independent contractors or consultants).

When an employer hires an employee for a temporary period, the temporary employee is still an at will employee of the employer, and the relationship is governed by the same laws as those applicable to at will employees. As with permanent employees, legally mandated benefits, such as workers’ compensation insurance and unemployment insurance, must be offered to temporary employees. Optional benefits need not be offered to temporary employees.

An independent contractor or consultant is not considered an employee of the employer. Instead, an independent contractor is self-employed, and payments made to the independent contractor are considered contract payments rather than wages. The U.S. Internal Revenue Service (“IRS”) and other governmental agencies have a variety of tests for determining whether a worker is an employee or an independent contractor, which, despite variations among the tests, tend to share the same primary factors. Essentially, workers who are performing the same job and performing under the same supervision as regular employees are usually deemed to be employees. Additional factors shared by the various tests include: the degree of control the employer exercises over the worker’s hours and manner of performance; whether the employer provides the worker’s tools and/or employee benefits (e.g., medical insurance, vacation pay); the length of service; and the method of payment (e.g., is the worker paid hourly or on a project basis).

The consequences of incorrectly classifying an employee as an independent contractor can be far-reaching and expensive (e.g., liability for unpaid payroll taxes and penalties, administrative claims for benefits provided to regular employees, liability for unpaid unemployment insurance and workers’ compensation premiums, increased exposure to governmental audits, and potential exposure to employment-related civil suits and administrative claims).

c. Employment Agreements

While it is not required or necessary to enter into a written employment agreement with any employee, social sector organizations may wish to enter into written employment agreements with one or more key leaders. If an organization chooses to enter into an employment agreement with a particular employee, such agreements typically spell out the term of employment (even if it is “at-will”), duties, compensation and circumstances under which the agreement may be terminated by either party. In addition, such agreements often contain provisions requiring key employees to keep information confidential even after they leave employment and barring them from becoming employed by certain competing organizations for a limited period of time following termination, i.e. a “non-compete agreement.” The provisions of these agreements and whether any such agreement should be used should be discussed with an employment attorney before they are presented to an employee or a prospective employee.

d. Government Contractors

A number of federal laws impose specific requirements on employers who contract with the government or a government-funded agency and on employers who receive grants or other funding from the government. These laws include special equal opportunity laws, affirmative action laws, prevailing wage laws, and drug-free workplace laws. The application of the laws depends on the value of the contract or funding and/or the number of employees in the company.

e. Privacy of Employee Social Security Numbers

Michigan law requires employers to comply with a number of restrictions and prohibitions regarding the use of an employee’s Social Security number. Particularly, employers are prohibited from publicly displaying more than four sequential digits of an employee’s Social Security number and from printing more than four sequential digits of an employee’s Social Security number on any identification card, membership card or license. Additionally, employers are prohibited from requiring an employee to transmit more than four sequential digits of the employee’s Social Security number over the Internet or computer network unless the connection is secure and the transmission is encrypted.

Michigan law also requires that employers who obtain one or more Social Security numbers in the ordinary course of business must create a privacy policy that ensures the confidentiality of the numbers, prohibits unlawful disclosure of the numbers, limits access to records that contain the numbers, describes proper disposal procedures for the numbers, and establishes penalties for a violation of the privacy policy. Employers are further required to publish the privacy policy in an employee handbook, a procedures manual or in one or more similar documents.

f. Employee Records

In Michigan, an employer is either required to or should maintain the following records on each employee for the following number of years:

- 3 years – all personnel and payroll records listing employee’s name, address, birth date, occupational classification, total basic rate of pay, total hours worked in each pay period, total wages paid in each pay period, and an itemization of deductions and fringe benefits.

- 4 years – all disciplinary reports, letters of reprimand, or other records of disciplinary action. Such records may be maintained after four years if a release is ordered in a legal action or arbitration.

- 30 years – records of employee exposure to potentially toxic substances or harmful physical agents, workplace environmental monitoring and testing must be kept for 30 years.

- 30 years after employee’s last day of employment – records related to medical histories, test results and other medical information about employees. Such records must be filed separately from personnel records.

In general, under federal laws, an employer is either required to or should maintain the following records on each employee:

- 1 year – documents related to hiring, accommodations, promotions, discipline, and discharge, including: job applications, resumes, or any other form of employment inquiry whenever submitted in response to an advertisement or notice of job opening, including records pertaining to failure or refusal to hire any individual; records relating to promotion, demotion, transfer, selection for training or apprenticeship, layoff, recall, or discharge of any employee; job orders submitted to an employment agency or labor organization for recruitment of personnel; test papers completed by applicants or candidates for any position; results of any physical examination if such is considered in connection with a personnel action; advertisements or notices relating to job openings, promotions, training, or opportunities for overtime work; requests for reasonable accommodation for disability or religious observance and what accommodation, if any was granted. This will cover the limitations period of claims under Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (“Title VII”), the Americans with Disabilities Act (“ADA”) and the Age Discrimination in Employment Act (“ADEA”) (see Section 8 below for summaries of these and other federal laws).

3 years – Payroll records listing employee’s full name, home address, date of birth, sex (for Equal Pay Act purposes), occupation/job title, time of day and day of week on which workweek begins, regular rate of pay, the basis for determining regular rate of pay (including any payments excluded from the regular rate of pay), straight-time earnings, overtime premium earnings, additions/subtractions from wages for each pay period, total wages for each pay period, and date of payment and pay period covered by each payment. This is for claims under the ADEA and Fair Labor Standards Act (“FLSA”).

2 years – Supplementary payroll records such as basic time sheets or production records that contain the daily starting and stopping times of individual employees and/or amount produced that day, wage rate tables for computing piece rates or other rates used in computing straight-time earnings, wages, salary, or overtime, and any records needed to explain the wage rate differential based on sex within the establishment (e.g., production, seniority, or other bona fide business criteria). Such information may be necessary in responding to claims under the FLSA, including the Equal Pay Act.

1 year after plan terminates – Employee benefit plan records including: pension plans, insurance plans, seniority systems, merit systems. This includes benefit plans covered by ERISA as well as set plans for advancement, layoff, or reinstatement based on seniority, merit, or some other formula which will be pertinent to either an issue under a collective bargaining agreement or claims of age or other discrimination.

3 years – Records related to qualified family and medical leave including: basic payroll and employee data (used to determine qualification for protection under the Family Medical Leave Act (“FMLA”)), dates and hours FMLA leave is taken, hours worked in 12 months prior to start of leave, copies of employee notices furnished to employer, copies of notices provided to employee of rights and responsibilities under FMLA, employer polices applicable to use of family and medical leave, documents verifying premium payments of employee benefits (both employer paid and employee portion of premium), records of any disputes with employees over use of FMLA leave. These documents will assist in supporting compliance with FMLA.
30 years – Records of employee exposure to toxic substances. Such records are required by the Occupational Safety and Health Act (“OSHA”).

5 years – Occupational illness or injury records. These records, required by OSHA, should be kept for 5 years after the year in which the injury was sustained or treatment ended, whichever is longer.

3 years or 1 year after termination – I-9 Employment Eligibility Verification Form. These forms must be kept for a minimum of 3 years or 1 year after the employee’s employment ends, whichever is longer.

4 years – Tax records related to income tax withholdings. This is required by the Federal Insurance Contribution Act and the Federal Unemployment Tax Act.

At a minimum, social sector organizations should maintain one or more personnel files for each employee, containing any offer letters and agreements signed by the employee, required wage and hour records, records regarding promotion, compensation, termination, disciplinary action, and any documents used to determine the employee’s qualifications for employment. Medical records, immigration information, and other confidential documents, such as reference checks and investigative files for harassment claims, should be kept separately from an employee’s regular personnel file and should be kept confidential.

3. Employment Policies and Employee Handbooks

Every employer should consider maintaining written employment policies. Written policies serve to clarify expectations, reduce risk and, in some cases, comply with statutory requirements such as those in the Family and Medical Leave Act (“FMLA”). In addition, both state and federal law require that information regarding certain laws be posted in an area accessible to all employees. There are several services that provide updated posters containing these notices. Most concern compliance with the FMLA, Title VII, the Uniformed Services Employment and Reemployment Rights Act (“USERRA”), workers’ compensation, the organization’s anti-harassment policy and state and federal wage and hour laws.

Policies for any employment manual or handbook should include:

a. At Will Statement, as discussed above.

b. Nondiscrimination/Equal Employment Opportunity Statement

Under federal law, employers are prohibited from discriminating on the basis of race, color, religion, sex, national origin, veteran status, pregnancy, age, or disability. The discrimination laws prohibit an employer from making employment-related decisions, such as hiring, firing, promotions, pay increases, or conditioning other terms and conditions of employment on a person’s protected status.

Failing to comply with discrimination laws can result in expensive lawsuits or administrative investigations. In general, these laws require that all employees be treated equally without regard to their protected status. In addition, employers may not retaliate against employees who make claims under employment discrimination laws. Employers also should be aware of their obligations to make reasonable accommodations for employees where the employees’ disabilities or religious beliefs conflict with employment requirements. These obligations, which exist under both federal and Michigan law, are unlike other equal employment opportunity laws in that treating all employees equally will not satisfy the obligations. Instead, employers must take positive steps to reasonably accommodate employees with disabilities and specific religious practices.

See federal laws regarding discrimination in “Federal Law” section below. See Michigan laws regarding discrimination in “Other State Specific Considerations” section below.

c. Non-Discrimination/No Harassment Policy and Reporting Procedure

Both federal and Michigan laws prohibit harassment in the workplace against any of the classes of employees protected under federal and state discrimination law. Two types of conduct constitute “harassment in the workplace.” The most obvious occurs when a supervisor makes a job promotion or benefit dependent on the receipt of sexual favors (often called “quid pro quo” harassment). The other type occurs when an employee has to endure comments, physical contact, physical gestures, or other behavior that creates an offensive atmosphere for that employee (often called “hostile environment” harassment). While sexual harassment is most often thought of, harassment on the basis of race, disability, age, etc. is also prohibited.

An employer is required to take all reasonable steps necessary to prevent the occurrence of either type of harassment, which includes having an appropriate and comprehensive policy against harassment. For this reason, a harassment policy that both expressly prohibits harassment and provides avenues for employees to report harassing behavior are recommended in any workplace. Employees should be encouraged to report any harassing behavior to their supervisor and/or a human resources person or senior manager. Reasonable steps to prevent harassment would also include periodic dissemination of the harassment policy, harassment training (particularly for supervisors), investigations of any complaints, and, when harassment occurs, prompt and effective remedial action. Employers cannot retaliate against an employee who complains about harassment.
d. OSHA Injury and Illness Prevention

The Occupational Safety and Health Act ("OSHA") regulates workplace safety for employers in businesses which affect commerce. Under OSHA, employers are required to furnish their employees with a place of employment free from recognized hazards that are causing, or are likely to cause, death or serious physical harm. Employers must also comply with occupational safety and health standards which are issued under the Act. "Right to know" regulations issued under OSHA require that employees in certain industries be warned about hazardous materials and chemicals to which they may be exposed. OSHA sets forth a detailed procedure for adopting safety and health standards and provides for inspection, investigation and enforcement. Citations issued for noncompliance can result in civil and criminal penalties, including fines and, for violations causing the death of an employee, imprisonment. States are allowed to develop and enforce their own plans setting and enforcing occupational safety and health standards. Some industries have specific statutes which regulate employee safety and health.

e. Workplace Violence

Employers should take steps to prevent violence in the workplace. This may include policies against bringing weapons into the workplace, taking prompt and appropriate action against any acts or threats of violence, and creating an environment that will reduce the likelihood of violence in the workplace. Employers should consider the advisability of implementing a zero-tolerance policy for workplace violence whereby any physical altercation by an employee will result in immediate termination of employment.

f. Medical Leaves of Absence (FMLA, if applicable, etc.), as discussed below.

g. Overtime Exempt Safe Harbor Policy.

An overtime safe harbor policy provides a window for correction for an employer who makes improper deductions from an employee’s paycheck.

h. An acknowledgment form indicating that the employee has received the handbook and is aware of and understands the policies and procedures set forth in it.

i. Handbook statements may bind employer.

Under Michigan law, employers can sometimes inadvertently create enforceable employment contracts through statements made in the employee handbook. However, an employer may reserve the right to make changes to the employee handbook by including an appropriate statement in the handbook. An employer in Michigan may also include language expressly stating that its stated policies do not afford employees enforceable contract rights and that employees may not rely on policy statements as affording them contractual rights.

4. Hiring Process

The hiring process involves receiving and reviewing applications, interviewing potential candidates, and selecting the employee. Several federal and Michigan laws limit what employers can and do ask during the process.

a. Applications, Interviewing, Reference Checks and Background Checks

The application process generally includes publishing the open position and accepting applications. Every help-wanted advertisement should contain an equal employment opportunity statement. Discrimination laws prohibit certain questions on the application, particularly those that elicit information about a person’s protected status and are not job related.

The interviewing process generally involves interviews and may involve reference checks. Federal and Michigan discrimination laws prohibit employers from asking certain questions during the hiring process. For example, questions regarding a person’s age, marital status, religion, or other questions related to a person’s protected status are prohibited, unless they directly relate to the qualifications for the job. Every person who interviews candidates and conducts reference checks should have a working knowledge of the laws that govern employment interviews.

Employers who use outside organizations to conduct background checks must comply with the federal credit-reporting law under the Fair Credit Reporting Act, which requires certain disclosure and reports to be made available to applicants.

Federal disability laws impose certain affirmative obligations on employers to ensure that disabled persons have a fair opportunity to participate in the hiring process. If any pre-employment testing is administered, then reasonable accommodations must be made to those applicants who require them. Further, the use of testing or other criteria not related to the essential functions of the position being filled should not be used as they may have a discriminatory impact on disabled applicants.

Michigan does not have a law that directly addresses pre-employment drug testing; however, if an employer is going to administer a drug test, then it should have a set policy and make sure it is applied across the board. Applicants may be required to disclose the use of prescription drugs to the test administrator, and that information should be kept confidential and only be used to determine if the applicant passed or failed the drug test. Such information is not provided to the employer. Employers should also be aware that while employers can make offers of employment conditional upon an applicant satisfactorily passing a physical exam or drug test, employers may not require an applicant to undergo a medical exam before an offer of an employment is made.

b. Criminal Record Checks

There is no Federal law that prohibits an employer from asking about arrest and conviction records. However, it is the position of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission (“EEOC”), the federal agency that enforces federal anti-discrimination laws, that using such records as an absolute measure to prevent an individual from being hired could limit the employment opportunities of some protected groups and thus cannot be used in this way.

The EEOC distinguishes between arrest and convictions records, and takes the position that an arrest does not indicate that criminal conduct occurred, and therefore, exclusion from employment based on an arrest generally is not job-related and consistent with business necessity. However, it does provide that an employer may make an employment decision based on the conduct underlying the arrest if that conduct makes the individual unfit for the position in question. On the other hand, according to the EEOC, a conviction record generally provides sufficient evidence that the individual has engaged in the conduct in question.

The EEOC has held that without proof of business necessity, an employer’s use of arrest records to disqualify job applicants constitutes unlawful discrimination. The EEOC has also ruled that the mere request for arrest information, even if the employer does not consider such information, is illegal because it tends to discourage minority applicants.

The EEOC takes the position that a blanket policy that excludes individuals from all employment opportunities because of a criminal conviction is not job-related and consistent with business necessity.

In Michigan, an employer may request criminal conviction records and records of pending felony charges and past felony arrests when a conviction did not occur. An employer in Michigan who wishes to do a criminal records check on an applicant should have the applicant sign a release and authorization, which can be included on the application form.

c. Immigration

All employers are required to verify that every new hire is either a U.S. citizen or authorized to work in the U.S. All employees must complete Employment Eligibility Verification (I-9) Forms and produce required documentation within three days of their hire date. Failure to follow the I-9 process can result in penalties and an audit by the U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement.

Employers cannot discriminate against employees based on their immigration status. Thus, once an employee has proved that he or she is eligible to work in the U.S, the employee’s immigration status should not be used in any other employment decisions.

5. Compensation and Benefits

Several different federal and Michigan laws regulate various forms of compensation and benefits. Each social sector organization should adopt a compensation scheme that is compatible with the organization’s mission and furthers its human resources goals.

a. Wages

Most employers — regardless of size — are governed by both federal and state wage and hour laws. Federal and state wage and hour laws differ slightly, and employers must follow both. Therefore, in Michigan, employers must follow the law which is most favorable to employees.

The two major requirements in both federal and Michigan wage and hour laws concern: (1) payment of the minimum wage and (2) payment for overtime hours. Under the minimum wage laws, employers must pay employees an amount that is at least the statutory minimum wage multiplied by the number of hours that the employee worked in any given work week. As of July 1, 2008, the Michigan minimum wage was set at $7.40/hr. Effective July 24, 2009, the federal minimum wage was increased to $7.25/hr. Under the laws governing overtime, employers must pay most employees additional compensation for overtime hours, with certain exceptions. In Michigan, this additional compensation is calculated at a rate of 1.5 times the regular rate for work performed in excess of a 40-hour work week.

Minimum wage and overtime laws are not limited to hourly employees. Employees who are paid in other ways, such as by salary or commission, may also be entitled to minimum wages and overtime pay. The minimum wage laws apply to all employees and the overtime laws apply to all employees except those who fall into one of the “exempt” classifications under federal or Michigan law.

Wage and hour issues can be very complicated; you should consult with an attorney to ensure that your employees are properly classified and are being paid correctly.
b. Bonuses

Bonuses can improve employee retention and provide extra incentives for reaching certain targets. Employers who provide bonuses (other than gift bonuses like holiday bonuses) should have a written bonus plan to ensure clarity, and to avoid unintended implied bonuses in contracts. Furthermore, how bonuses are determined and whether they are guaranteed (for example, for hitting certain production goals) or discretionary will also have an effect on calculating an employee’s overtime pay rate.

c. Taxes

Employers are required to withhold federal income tax and social security tax from taxable wages paid to employees. Under federal law, funds withheld must be deposited in certain depositories accompanied by a Federal Tax Deposit Coupon (IRS Form 8109) or through the Electronics Federal Tax Payment System (EFTPS). An Employer’s Quarterly Federal Tax Return (IRS Form 941) must then be filed before the end of the month following each calendar quarter. Willful failure on the part of the employer to collect, account for, and pay withholding taxes will subject the employer to a significant monetary penalty, and in some cases will impose personal liability on those responsible for remitting the withholding taxes.

Most employers, including non-profit organizations that are not 501(c)(3) organizations, must also file an Employer’s Annual Federal Unemployment (FUTA) Tax Return (IRS Form 940) and pay any balance due on or before January 31 of each year. Details may be found in IRS Circular E, available at http://www.irs.gov/publications/p15/index.html. Employers who are 501(c)(3) organizations, however, are not required to file a FUTA Tax Return. If payment of tax is required, any balance is due on or before January 31 of each year. Details may be found in IRS Circular E, available at http://www.irs.gov/publications/p15/index.html and in Publication 15A.

d. Mandatory Benefits

i) Workers’ Compensation

Michigan law requires all that employers who employ three or more employees must provide workers’ compensation insurance for their employees. Employers with fewer than 3 employees may also be required to provide workers’ compensation insurance if at least one employee has worked at least 35 hours per week during a 13-week period. There are some limited exemptions from this requirement, but the workers’ compensation benefits are the only benefits available for an employee who is injured “in the course of employment.” What this means for employers is that an employee who is injured while performing work for the employer cannot sue the employer for his/her injury, but is compensated through workers’ compensation.

ii) Unemployment Insurance

Michigan requires employers to contribute to an unemployment compensation fund. When an employee is granted unemployment compensation benefits, whether those payments are counted against the employer’s account depends on several factors, one of which is how long the employee worked for the employer. Employees terminated within 90 days of hire may receive unemployment benefits, but those payments are traditionally not taxed to the employer. Unemployment compensation benefits may be denied to an employee if the employer can establish that the employee was released due to “misconduct”, as defined by the statute, or can establish that the employee resigned from employment or abandoned the job without reasons attributable to the employer.

iii) Other Michigan Laws

Michigan law does not require any particular job benefits other than the payment of minimum wages. This means that the law does not require that employees receive a certain amount of paid time off, whether for vacation, holidays, or sick leave. If benefits are provided, there is no requirement on how they are administered as long as they are not administered in a discriminatory fashion. Michigan law also does not require that employers provide any disability or medical insurance benefits. However, if such benefits are provided, the plans may be subject to ERISA, COBRA or HIPPA. See summaries of those laws in “Federal Law” section below.

iv) Federally Mandated Benefits

See summaries of FMLA, ERISA, COBRA and HIPPA in the “Federal Law” discussion below. If applicable, these federal laws mandate certain specified benefits.

e. Voluntary Benefits

An employer is not required to provide employees with retirement benefits, welfare plans, severance pay, or other voluntary benefits. However, many employers choose to provide employees with such benefits in order to attract and retain the most qualified workers. If an employer does establish such plans, they are governed by a federal law called the Employee Retirement Income Security Act (“ERISA”). See “Federal Law” section below. Under ERISA, employee benefit plans must comply with numerous and complex procedural requirements.

An employer is not required to provide employees with vacation pay. If an employer elects to provide such benefits, however, they should be uniformly applied in conformity with a written policy. This will provide protection against claims of discrimination and may be necessary to ensure the employer complies with the pay provisions of the Fair Labor Standards Act (“FLSA”) as it relates to “exempt” employees.

Although it is not uncommon to do so, employers are not required to give employees paid holidays. Indeed, except in cases where accommodation of religious holidays might be required, employers are not even required to give employees time off during holidays.

Employers are not required to offer paid sick leave to employees. Traditional sick leave is often limited to time off for dealing with the employee’s own illness or possibly to care for a sick child or spouse. Upon termination, the employer has no legal obligation to pay out unused sick leave, unless there is a written employment policy which mandates payout of accrued but unused sick time upon separation from employment.

Many employers choose to combine vacation, sick leave, personal days, and floating holidays into a single “paid time off” or “PTO” policy. This makes it easier to administer employee time off and a single policy for accumulating and using PTO will often suffice.

Paid leaves of absence, such as paid maternity or paternity leave, are not required by law, although many employers do offer some type of paid and/or unpaid leave.

Some employers offer a military leave for employees serving in the armed forces, armed forces reserves or National Guard.

6. Termination of Employment

Absent an employment contract that provides otherwise, an employee of a social sector organization may ordinarily be terminated with or without cause provided there is no violation of applicable anti-discrimination laws. Prior to termination, social sector organizations should thoroughly review all personnel and performance records concerning the employee or employees in question and carefully assess the risks of litigation. It is recommended that employment counsel be consulted before terminating employees.

a. Pay

All wages earned and unpaid at the time of discharge are due and payable upon the termination of employment and must be paid by the next regular pay date.
b. Severance Agreements / Releases

Generally, employers are not required to provide severance pay, unless they have agreed to do so. If the employer wants to offer severance to an employee, the employer may ask the employee to sign a release in exchange for the severance, in which the employee waives all legal claims the employee may have against the employer. If an employer seeks a release, the employee must be provided severance pay or other consideration in addition to any payments the employee was already entitled to receive. Federal law contains specific statutory requirements for waivers of age discrimination claims for employees 40 and over, and prohibits the waiver of certain wage claims.

c. Unemployment Insurance / Compensation

The purpose of Michigan’s unemployment compensation law is to provide benefits to those who find themselves unemployed through no fault of their own. The program is financed through employer contributions to the unemployment compensation fund and is based in-part on a percentage of the employer’s total payroll.

To be eligible for unemployment benefits under Michigan law, an applicant must: 1) be unemployed (as defined below); 2) have earned at least $1,998 during the highest earnings quarter and at least 1.5 times the highest earning quarter in the other three quarters combined; 3) file an application for unemployment benefits and register for work at an unemployment office; and 4) be seeking, able and available to perform suitable full-time work that the employee is qualified to perform.

Individuals are considered to be “unemployed” under Michigan law when they perform no services in a given week and receive no remuneration. In situations where individuals receive payments from their employers for periods in which they render no personal services, e.g., back pay awards, holiday and vacation pay, certain severance payments or employer funded disability pay, they are not “unemployed” and are not entitled to unemployment benefits under Michigan law. Additionally, an employee who leaves work voluntarily without good cause attributable to the employer is disqualified from receiving benefits under Michigan law.

d. Health Care Continuation (COBRA) Requirements

The Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1985 (“COBRA”) requires employers who provide employee health and medical benefits to provide notification to employees of their COBRA rights at the time of a “qualifying event” such as a resignation or an involuntary termination of employment. COBRA applies to employers with more than 20 employees. See “Federal Law” section below.
7. Immigration

With globalization and the increasing benefits of a diverse workforce, social sector employers located in the U.S. often seek to employ foreign personnel. This is particularly true with social sector organizations that are already working and addressing problems not just in the U.S. but around the world. A variety of permanent and temporary visas are available depending on various factors such as the job proposed for the alien, the alien’s qualifications, and the relationship between the U.S. employer and the foreign employer. Permanent residents are authorized to work where and for whom they wish. Temporary visa holders have authorization to remain in the U.S. for a temporary time and often the employment authorization is limited to specific employers, jobs, and even specific work sites.

When planning to bring foreign personnel to the U.S., U.S. employers should allow several months for processing by the United States Citizenship and Immigration Services (“USCIS”), as well as the Department of State and Department of Labor. Furthermore, employers should be aware that certain corporate changes, including stock or asset sales, job position restructuring, change of job sites, and changes in job duties, may dramatically affect (if not invalidate) the employment authorization of foreign employees.

a. Permanent Residency (the “green card”)

Permanent residency is commonly based on either family relationships, such as marriage to a U.S. citizen, or an offer of employment. Permanent residence gained through employment often involves a time-consuming process that can take several years. Therefore, employers considering the permanent residence avenue for an alien employee should ascertain the requirements for that immigration filing prior to bringing the employee to the U.S.

b. Temporary Visas.

The following are the most commonly used temporary visas:

i) B-1 Business Visitors and B-2 Visitors for Pleasure

These visas are commonly utilized for brief visits to the U.S. of six months or less. Neither visa authorizes employment in the U.S. B-1 business visitors are often sent by their overseas employers to negotiate contracts, to attend business conferences or board meetings, or to fill contractual obligations such as repairing equipment for brief periods in the U.S. B-1 or B-2 visitors cannot be on the U.S. payroll or receive U.S.-source remuneration.

ii) F-1 Academic Student Visas Including Practical Training
Often foreign students come to the U.S. in F-1 status for academic training or M-1 status for vocational training. Students in F-1 status can often engage, within certain constraints, in on-campus employment and/or off-campus curricular or optional practical training for limited periods of time. Vocational students cannot obtain curricular work authorization but may receive some post-completion practical training in limited instances.

iii) J-1 Exchange Visitor Visas
These visas are for academic students, scholars, researchers, and teachers traveling to the U.S. to participate in an approved exchange program. Training, not employment, is authorized. Potential employers should note that some J-1 exchange visitors and their dependents are subject to a two-year foreign residence requirement abroad before being allowed to change status and remain or return to the U.S.

iv) TN Professionals
Under the North American Free Trade Agreement, certain Canadians and Mexicans who qualify and fill specific defined professional positions can qualify for TN status. Such professions include some medical/allied health professionals, engineers, computer systems analysts, and management consultants. TN holders are granted one-year stays for specific employers and other employment is not allowed without prior USCIS approval. Particularly with regard to Canadians, paperwork required for filing these requests is minimal.

v) E-1 Treaty Trader and E-2 Treaty Investor Visas
These are temporary visas for persons in managerial, executive or essential skills capacities who individually qualify for or are employed by companies that engage in substantial trade with or investment in the U.S. E visas are commonly used to transfer managers, executives or engineers with specialized knowledge about the proprietary processes or practices of a foreign company to assist the company at its U.S. operations. Generally, E visa holders receive a five-year visa stamp but only two-year entries at any time.

vi) E-3 Treaty Alien in a Specialty Occupation Visas for Australian Citizens
E-3 visas are for Australian citizens who will be employed in the U.S. in specialty occupations that require at least a bachelor’s degree. Like H-1B visas, the U.S. employer must pay the E-3 worker the higher of the actual wage paid by such employer to U.S. workers or the prevailing wage paid to U.S. workers in local commuting area as determined by Department of Labor online wage library or other valid salary survey. These temporary visas are granted for a period of 2 years and are renewable indefinitely.
vii) H-1B Specialty Occupation Visas

H-1B visas are for persons in specialty occupations that require at least a bachelor’s degree. Examples of such professionals are computer programmers, engineers, architects, accountants, and, on occasion, business persons. Initially, H-1B temporary workers are given three-year temporary stays with possible extensions of up to an aggregate of six years. H-1B visas are employer-and job-specific. A U.S. employer must pay H-1B workers the higher of actual wage paid by such employer to U.S. workers or the prevailing wage paid to U.S. workers in local commuting area as determined by Department of Labor online wage library or other valid salary survey.

viii) L-1 Intra-company Transferee Visas

Most often utilized in the transfer of executives, managers or persons with specialized knowledge from international companies to U.S.-related companies, L-1 visas provide employer-specific work authorization for an initial three-year period with possible extensions of up to seven years in certain categories. L-1A visas are designed for the transfer of executives and managers while L-1B for specialized knowledge persons. As in the case of certain E visa capacities, some L managers or executives may qualify for a shortcut in any permanent residence filings.

ix) O-1 and O-2 Visas for Extraordinary Ability Persons

O-1 and O-2 visas are for persons who have extraordinary abilities in the sciences, arts, education, business or athletics and sustained national or international acclaim. Also included in this category are those persons who assist in such O-1 artistic or athletic performances.

x) P-1 Athletes/Group Entertainers and P-2 Reciprocal Exchange Visitor Visas

These temporary visas allow certain athletes who compete at internationally recognized levels or entertainment groups who have been internationally recognized as outstanding for a substantial period of time, to come to the U.S. and work. Essential support personnel can also be included in this category.

xi) Others

There are a number of other non-immigrant visas categories that may apply to specific desired entries.

c. Immigration and Nationality Act (“INA”)

The Immigration and Nationality Act ("INA") includes provisions addressing employment eligibility, employment verification and nondiscrimination. Employers may hire only persons who may legally work in the U.S. (i.e., citizens and nationals of the U.S.) and aliens authorized to work in the U.S. The employer must verify the identity and employment eligibility of anyone to be hired, which includes completing Employment Eligibility Verification Form (I-9). Employers must keep each I-9 on file for at least three years, or one year after employment ends, whichever is longer.

d. Immigration Reform and Control Act ("IRCA")

The Immigration Reform and Control Act ("IRCA") requires that employers, regardless of size, inspect and verify documentation establishing the identity and eligibility to work in the U.S. of every newly hired employee, and makes it unlawful to hire an alien who is ineligible for work in the U.S. Employers are subject to significant fines and penalties for failure to comply with documentation requirements under the IRCA, as well as for hiring unauthorized workers. IRCA also prohibits employers of four or more workers from discriminating against lawfully admitted aliens.

8. Federal Law

Described below are some of the more significant federal laws and regulations, not including immigration, affecting the employment relationship.

a. Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 ("Title VII")

Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 ("Title VII") prohibits employment discrimination based on race, sex, color, national origin, or religion. Title VII applies to all employers with 15 or more employees and prohibits discrimination in areas of advertising, recruiting, hiring, promotion, compensation, benefits administration, and termination. Title VII also prohibits harassment based on an individual’s protected characteristics, as well as retaliation for engaging in conduct protected by Title VII. To recover damages, any individual who has suffered such discrimination must file a complaint with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission ("EEOC") within 180 days of the alleged discrimination. In Michigan, however, this time period is extended to 300 days from the alleged discrimination. Once the EEOC investigates the allegations and makes a determination regarding the sufficiency of the evidence to prove the alleged discrimination, the EEOC will notify the employee in writing of his or her right to bring a civil action. Regardless of the EEOC’s determination, the employee may, within 90 days of receipt of the notice, bring a legal action based on his or her allegations. An individual’s possible remedies under Title VII include compensatory and punitive damages, back pay and front pay, reinstatement, and attorneys’ fees.

b. Age Discrimination in Employment Act ("ADEA")

The Age Discrimination in Employment Act ("ADEA") makes it unlawful for employers to fail or refuse to hire, to discharge, limit, segregate or classify protected employees, or otherwise discriminate against them with respect to their compensation, terms, conditions or privileges of employment because of their age. The ADEA protects employees who are at least 40 years old and applies to all employers with 20 or more employees employed in an industry affecting commerce. There are limited exceptions to the ADEA where age is a "bona fide occupational qualification" necessary to the particular business, or where the differentiation is based on reasonable factors other than age. Employees may file charges of discrimination with the EEOC, which enforces the ADEA. The employee or the EEOC may then sue in federal court for damages and other relief. Remedies under the ADEA include reinstatement or front pay, back pay, liquidated damages, and attorneys’ fees.

c. Americans with Disabilities Act (“ADA”)

The Americans with Disabilities Act (“ADA”) makes it unlawful for employers to discriminate against a qualified individual with a disability based on the existence of a disability, a record of a disability, or on the employer’s perception that an employee is disabled. The ADA requires that employers take reasonable steps to accommodate disabled individuals in the workplace unless such measures would constitute an undue hardship on the employer. The ADA applies to employers engaged in interstate commerce that have 15 or more employees. The procedures for pursuing a claim under the ADA, as well as the available remedies, are similar to those provided by Title VII.

e. Employee Polygraph Protection Act (“EPPA”)

The Employee Polygraph Protection Act (“EPPA”) generally prohibits the use of polygraph machines by an employer in determining whether to hire, promote or terminate an individual. Some private employers, including those within the security field, those involved in the protection of the public, those involved in operations impacting national security, and those authorized to manufacture, distribute, or dispense any controlled substance, are exempt from the EPPA. The EPPA also permits the use of a lie detector by any employer when the employer sustains an economic loss, the employee to be tested had access to the property that is the subject of the investigation, the employer has a reasonable suspicion that the employee was involved in the incident being investigated, and the employer obtains a statement from the employee authorizing the test. Even in these limited situations where use of a lie detector is permissible, an employee being tested can terminate the examination at any time. Either the Secretary of Labor or an aggrieved employee can bring an action against an employer for violating the EPPA. Remedies include reinstatement, promotion, back pay, and attorneys’ fees. The Department of Labor may also impose a fine up to $10,000.
The Equal Pay Act of 1963 ("EPA")/Lilly Ledbetter Fair Pay Act

The Equal Pay Act of 1963 requires employers to pay men and women equal wages for equal work. Equal pay is required for any jobs "the performance of which require equal skill, effort and responsibility and which are performed under similar working conditions." There are exceptions for seniority systems, merit systems, pay systems based on quantity or quality of production, or other pay differentials based on factors other than sex. The Equal Pay Act applies to employers who have two or more employees engaged in interstate commerce, in the production of goods for interstate commerce, or in handling or working with goods and materials in interstate commerce. An employee who believes his or her employer has violated the EPA may bring an action in federal court or file a charge with the EEOC. The employee need not first bring the claim before the EEOC in order to sue. Remedies include back pay, attorneys’ fees, and court costs.

The Lilly Ledbetter Fair Pay Act amends Title VII of the 1964 Civil Rights Act, the Age Discrimination in Employment Act, the Americans with Disabilities Act, and the Rehabilitation Act so that the time limits for filing a charge run from the last, not the first, alleged discriminatory decision. Under the Lilly Ledbetter Fair Pay Act, an employee’s time limit for filing a charge of discrimination alleging sex discrimination regarding compensation would begin from her last paycheck, not her first. Because the issuance of each paycheck starts the statute of limitations period again, the practical effect of the Lilly Ledbetter Fair Pay Act consists of the effective elimination of a statute of limitations for this kind of claim under the amended statutes.

g. The Federal Fair Labor Standards Act ("FLSA")

The Federal Fair Labor Standards Act ("FLSA") regulates wages and hours of certain covered employees. Employers must keep accurate records of hours worked by covered employees and those employees must receive a regular rate of pay for each hour they work up to 40 hours in a week. The regular rate must be at least equal to the required "minimum wage," which was increased to $7.25 on July 24, 2009. All hours over 40 in a week are considered "overtime." Generally, an employer must provide compensation to any covered (i.e., non-exempt) employee who works in excess of 40 hours in a week at an amount not less than one and a half times the worker’s regular rate of pay for each hour of overtime. These protections may not be eliminated by individual agreement or by union contract. While appearing simple, the FLSA is subject to many regulations, exceptions, interpretations and exemptions and is not capable of short summary. For example, professional, executive and administrative employees, as defined by regulations, are exempt from both the minimum wage and overtime pay requirements and some occupations and industries have special minimum wage provisions. Employers who violate the FLSA are subject to civil penalties, including fines, and prevailing employees may recover unpaid wages, unpaid overtime compensation, liquidated damages, and attorneys’ fees.

Although the FLSA does not generally require employers to provide break periods, employers must provide a reasonable break time for nursing mothers to express breast milk and a place, other than a bathroom, that is shielded from view and free from intrusion from coworkers and the public. This law is part of the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act (“PPACA”), which took effect when the PPACA was signed into law on March 23, 2010. While an employer is not required to compensate employees for such breaks, to the extent that the employee uses otherwise available paid break time to express milk, an employer may not deny pay for the break. Also, the provisions of the FLSA concerning breaks for nursing mothers do not modify existing regulations under the FLSA concerning break time for nonexempt employees. These regulations require that rest periods of short duration (from 5 to 20 minutes) be paid. Employers with fewer than 50 employees are not subject to the nursing-mother break requirement if it would impose an undue hardship by causing the employer significant difficulty or expense when considered in relation to the size, financial resources, nature, or structure of the employer’s business.

h. The Family and Medical Leave Act (“FMLA”)

The Family and Medical Leave Act (“FMLA”) requires that eligible employees working for organizations with 50 or more employees be allowed to take up to 12 weeks of unpaid leave per year for the birth or adoption of a child, for the serious health condition of the employee or spouse, parent or child of the employee, or for a qualifying exigency arising out of the fact that a spouse, child or parent of the employee is on active duty (or has been notified of an impending call or order to active duty) in the Armed Forces in the support of a contingency operation. A “serious health condition” includes inpatient hospitalization and subsequent treatment therefore and continuing treatment by a health care provider, including pregnancy.

To be eligible for FMLA leave, the employee must have worked 12 months or longer, performed at least 1,250 hours of service for the employer in the 12 months prior to the date of leave, and must work at a site within 75 miles of which the employer has 50 or more employees. If the employee’s need for leave is foreseeable, the employee must provide his or her employer with 30 days notice before taking leave. When the need for leave is unforeseeable, the employee is required to provide notice as soon as practicable.

An individual who believes his or her FMLA rights have been violated is entitled to file a lawsuit. Remedies include lost compensation, liquidated damages, other out of pocket expenses, equitable relief, and attorneys’ fees.
i. The Federal Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 ("ERISA")

The Federal Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 ("ERISA") regulates employee benefit plans maintained by employers engaged in commerce or in an industry or activity affecting commerce. ERISA contains specific requirements governing the creation, modification, maintenance and reporting of employer pension and retirement plans as well as other plans relating to employee health and welfare benefits. Welfare plans include, for example, plans providing medical, hospital, death or other insurance benefits, vacation and severance benefits. ERISA sets out a detailed regulatory scheme mandating certain reporting and disclosure requirements, providing exemptions for religious institutions, setting forth fiduciary obligations and, in most types of retirement plans, coverage, vesting and funding requirements. ERISA does not prescribe any particular level of severance, insurance, pension or welfare benefits, nor does it require that they be provided at all. This is a matter to be decided by the employer and, if the employer is unionized, to be bargained between the employer and the union. However, if benefits are offered, they must comply with regulations prohibiting discrimination and must be administered fairly under the terms of the benefit plan. ERISA generally preempts state laws governing employee plans and arrangements.

j. The Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reform Act ("COBRA")

The Consolidated Omnibus Budget Reform Act ("COBRA") requires employers with more than 20 employees who provide health and medical benefits to offer continuation of those benefits to former employees and their covered dependents ("qualified beneficiaries") upon the occurrence of certain “qualifying events.” COBRA generally provides a maximum continuation period of 18 months. In certain circumstances where a qualified beneficiary is disabled at any time during the first 60 days of COBRA coverage, the period can be extended to 29 months. Also, if certain qualifying events occur during the original 18 months of COBRA coverage, qualified beneficiaries become entitled to receive 36 months of continuation coverage. Employers may require electing qualified beneficiaries to pay the entire premium for COBRA coverage plus a 2% administrative charge. COBRA contains very specific procedures for notifying qualified beneficiaries of their COBRA rights. COBRA applies whether employees leave voluntarily or involuntarily.

k. Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act ("HIPAA")

The Health Insurance Portability and Accountability Act ("HIPPA") establishes limitations on the use of preexisting condition exclusions (so-called “portability” rules). HIPAA prevents group health plans or health insurance issuers from imposing a preexisting condition exclusion of more than 12 months (18 months for late enrollees) for coverage of any condition that was present during the six-month period ending on the individual's enrollment date. In addition to various other provisions, HIPAA mandates that preexisting condition limitations generally may not be imposed upon newborns or adopted children under age 18, and may not apply to pregnancy. The preexisting condition exclusion period must be reduced by periods of “creditable coverage”, generally defined as periods of continuous coverage the individual has under other health plans. HIPAA also imposes various other requirements on employers and group health plan providers and insurers, such as nondiscrimination and disclosure requirements, special enrollment rights, and special notice obligations. The HIPAA privacy rules extend privacy protection to all types of “protected health information” held by “covered entities.” Covered entities include health plans, health care clearinghouses, and health care providers. The HIPAA security rules impose requirements with respect to safeguarding and protecting the confidentiality, integrity and availability of electronic protected health information.

1. The Occupational Safety and Health Act ("OSHA")

The Occupational Safety and Health Act ("OSHA") regulates workplace safety for employers in businesses which affect commerce. Under OSHA, employers are required to furnish their employees with a place of employment free from recognized hazards that are causing, or are likely to cause, death or serious physical harm. Employers must also comply with occupational safety and health standards which are issued under the Act. "Right to know" regulations issued under OSHA require that employees in certain industries be warned about hazardous materials and chemicals to which they may be exposed. OSHA sets forth a detailed procedure for adopting safety and health standards and provides for inspection, investigation and enforcement. Citations issued for noncompliance can result in civil and criminal penalties, including fines and, for violations causing the death of an employee, imprisonment. States are allowed to develop and enforce their own plans setting and enforcing occupational safety and health standards. Some industries have specific statutes which regulate employee safety and health.

m. The Fair Credit Reporting Act ("FCRA")

The Fair Credit Reporting Act ("FCRA") prescribes the extent to, and manner in which, employers may use credit information in making employment decisions, including hiring and termination. The FRCA imposes strict guidelines requiring employers to use such credit reports only for a permissible purpose, after disclosure to employment applicants or employees of the intent to seek and use credit information, and after obtaining the written consent of the employee/applicant. The disclosure/consent may not be made a part of the employer’s application form. Additionally, employees/applicants must be notified of any adverse decision based in whole or in part upon credit information. Additional requirements apply to investigative consumer reports.

n. The Uniformed Services Employment and Reemployment Rights Act ("USERRA")

The Uniformed Services Employment and Reemployment Rights Act ("USERRA") prohibits discrimination against persons because of their service in the Armed Forces Reserve, the National Guard, or other uniformed services. USERRA prohibits an employer from denying any benefit of employment on the basis of an individual’s membership, application for membership, performance of service, application for service, or obligation for service in the uniformed services. USERRA also protects the right of veterans, reservists, National Guard members, and certain other members of the uniformed services to reclaim their civilian employment after being absent due to military service or training.

o. Genetic Information Nondiscrimination Act ("GINA")

The Genetic Information Nondiscrimination Act ("GINA") prohibits an employer from discriminating against an individual in hiring, firing, compensation, terms, or privileges of employment on the basis of genetic information of the individual or family member of the individual. The law defines genetic information as (1) an individual’s genetic tests; (2) an individual’s family member’s genetic tests; or (3) the manifestation of a disease or disorder in the individual’s family member. Subject to a number of narrowly defined exceptions, GINA prohibits an employer from requesting, requiring, or purchasing genetic information of the individual or family member. An employer may engage in genetic monitoring of biological effects of toxic substances in the workplace but only in certain narrowly defined situations. Employees may sue in a court of competent jurisdiction for relief from violations of GINA and obtain back pay, front pay, compensatory and punitive damages and attorney’s fees.

9. Michigan Specific Considerations

a. Elliot-Larsen Civil Rights Act ("ELCRA")

Michigan’s Elliot-Larsen Civil Rights Act prohibits discrimination on the basis of race, color, religion, sex, national origin, age, height, weight, handicap, familial status or marital status. It is applied much like Title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (summarized in federal law section above) in that the statute states that it is to be applied consistent with federal law under Title VII. However, employers should be aware of some important distinctions between the two laws. Unlike Title VII, the ELCRA allows an individual to bring suit in court without first exhausting administrative remedies. Also, the ELCRA applies to employers with one or more employees, whereas Title VII applies only to employers with 15 or more employees. Additionally, the ELCRA does not provide for punitive damages but does allow an employee to recover damages for emotional distress. Lastly, the statute of limitations for the filing of lawsuits based on the ELCRA is three years.

b. Michigan Persons with Disabilities Civil Rights Act ("PDCRA")

Michigan law prohibits employers from failing or refusing to hire an individual because of disability or genetic information that is unrelated to the individual’s ability to perform the duties of a particular job or position. Michigan law also requires employers to make reasonable accommodations for disabled persons, unless the accommodation would impose an undue hardship on the employer. Additionally, Michigan law makes it unlawful for an employer to retaliate against an individual because that individual has opposed a violation of or has filed a complaint under the PDCRA. As is true under the ELCRA, an employee has three years from the state of an alleged violation to commence a lawsuit.

c. Michigan Occupational Safety and Health Administration Act ("MIOSHA")

The Michigan Occupational Safety and Health Administration Act incorporates by reference the federal OSHA standards and gives them the same force and effect as a rule promulgated under Michigan law. The act protects employees who exercise rights afforded under the act from retaliatory action or discrimination. In order for an alleged act of retaliatory action or discrimination to be eligible for an investigation, the employee must file a complaint within 30 days and the complaint must stem from a safety and health issue.

d. Payment of Wages & Fringe Benefits Act

Michigan law requires that employers who choose to provide fringe benefits to their employees such as vacation and sick time must do so according to the terms set forth in a written contract or policy. This requirement therefore does not apply to promises of fringe benefits that are not made in writing.

Michigan law further provides that an employer may pay wages to an employee either by check or by direct deposit to the employee’s bank account. Unless restricted by a collective bargaining agreement, an employer in Michigan can require the use of either direct deposit or a payroll debit card. Employers who pay wages via direct deposit must also provide employees with a way to print the pay statement in a retainable form at the time of the payment of wages. In many instances, employees can use their assigned desktop or laptop computers to print the statement. However, if an employer has employees that do not have access to a computer as part of their job duties, then the employer should make a computer available for any employee to access and use in order to print their pay statement.

e. Military Leaves; Reemployment Protection

Michigan law provides even greater rights for those returning from military service than the USERRA (summarized in the federal law section above). Michigan's counterpart to the federal USERRA is the Military Leaves/Reemployment Act of 1955 (MLRPA). For example, under the MLRPA a returning employee is entitled to re-employment without exception while under USERRA the employer can avoid re-employing a returning employee if it can establish that circumstances have changed such that re-employment would be impossible, unreasonable, or would impose an undue hardship.

The MLRPA expressly applies to National Guard members in addition to members of other branches of the armed forces. Under the MLRPA, returning service members need not re-apply for employment if they have served for more than 180 days. Instead, the employee must only report to work within 90 days of completion of service. Re-employment rights do not cease unless the employee has served for five consecutive, not cumulative, years. Under the MLRPA, there exists a civil remedy for an aggrieved employee that includes reinstatement and reasonable attorneys’ fees. Additionally, a person who violates the act can be found guilty of a misdemeanor.

f. Guns in the Workplace

Michigan law allows citizens of the state to obtain a permit that allows them to carry a concealed pistol on their person. This law, however, does not interfere with the right of private employers to prohibit their employees from carrying a concealed pistol during the course of their employment duties.

g. Michigan Whistleblowers’ Protection Act

Michigan law prohibits employers from retaliating against an employee who reports or is about to report a violation or suspected violation of a federal or state law or regulation. Employees who have been retaliated against may sue for lost wages, actual damages, and full reinstatement of benefits and seniority rights. Employers that are found in violation of this statute may also be subject to a civil fine of up to $500. An employee who sues an employer for a violation of this law must do so within 90 days after the occurrence of the alleged violation.

h. Michigan Employee Right To Know Act

Michigan’s Bullard-Plawecki Employee Right to Know Act provides employees with the right to review, copy, and file a response to any personnel record. The law applies to all Michigan employers with four or more employees and prohibits an employer from using information contained in personnel records against an employee where such information was not included in the employee’s personnel record as required by the law. The law also governs the release of personnel information to third parties and empowers employees to enforce the law’s provisions.

i. Michigan Medical Marihuana Act

The Michigan Medical Marihuana Act became effective January 1, 2009, after Michigan voters approved a medical marihuana ballot initiative in November 2008. The MMMA allows a “qualifying patient” who has been issued and who possesses a registry identification card to possess up to 2.5 ounces of usable marihuana. The MMMA contains certain provisions relative to employment. It does not require an employer “to accommodate the ingestion of marihuana in any work place or any employee working while under the influence of marihuana.” In addition, the MMMA does not permit any person to (1) “undertake any task under the influence of marihuana, when doing so would constitute negligence or professional malpractice”; (2) possess or engage in the medical use of marihuana on any school, school bus, or correctional facility; (3) smoke marihuana in any public place; or (4) “operate, navigate, or be in actual physical control of any motor vehicle, aircraft, or motorboat while under the influence of marihuana.”

For private sector employers, the key question about the MMMA has been whether the MMMA protects an employee with a medical marijuana card from disciplinary action by the employer under its work rules or drug testing policy. A recent court ruling held that the MMMA does not regulate private employment and, accordingly, does not protect an employee against disciplinary action by a business. A Michigan employer accordingly can lawfully enforce its work rules against the use of drugs and its drug testing policies against employees who have medical marijuana cards under the MMMA.

j. Michigan Smoke Free Law

This law took effect May 1, 2010, and prohibits smoking in most public places, which includes places of employment and food service establishments. The Smoke Free Law defines “smoking” or “smoke” as “the burning of a lighted cigar, cigarette, pipe, or any other matter or substance that contains a tobacco product.” The law will be enforced against any employer who allows smoking anywhere within an enclosed building (4 walls and a roof), but will allow smoking by employees to occur outside the building in an area that is detached from the building.

k. Internet Privacy Protection Act

The Internet Privacy Protection Act (“IPPA”) took effect on December 28, 2012. The IPPA addresses a concern that employers may be demanding that job applicants and employees furnish their passwords to social media sites. The IPPA specifically prohibits an employer from (1) requesting an employee or a job applicant to “grant access to, allow observation of, or disclose information that allows access to or observation of the employee’s or applicant’s personal internet account”; and (2) discharging, disciplining, failing to hire, or otherwise penalizing an employee or a job applicant for failing to grant that kind of access to a personal internet account. The “access information” protected from disclosure to an employer consists of “user name, login information, or other security information that protects access to a personal internet account.”

The IPPA does not restrict an employer from “viewing, accessing, or utilizing” information about an employee or a job applicant that can be obtained “without any required access information or that is available in the public domain.” In addition, an employer retains the right to comply with a “duty to screen” employees or job applicants or to “monitor or retain employee communications” that is established under federal law or, under the Securities and Exchange Act, a “self-regulatory organization.”

A violation by an employer is subject to the following penalties: (1) criminal misdemeanor “punishable by a fine of not more than $1,000.00”; and (2) a lawsuit seeking injunctive relief, damages of “not more than $1,000.00,” “reasonable attorney fees,” and “court costs.” A plaintiff must make a demand for damages of “not more than $1,000.00” at least 60 days before filing a lawsuit for damages or 60 days before adding a claim for damages to a lawsuit.
