Aboriginal Edmonton is a dynamic, vibrant, and an energetic community. It is young, entrepreneurial, educated, culturally active, artistic, and caring. It is the home of the second largest urban Aboriginal population in Canada, and lies in the heart of Treaty 6 territory.

The “Aboriginal community” is not one community, but “many communities”, and is, therefore, a reflection of the diverse and multifaceted Aboriginal population that makes Edmonton their home. The Aboriginal people in Edmonton have roots that are deeply sown and well-traveled through-out the whole of the City and extend from the past, through to the present, and will continue well into the future.

The City of Edmonton’s Edmonton Aboriginal Urban Affairs Committee (EAUAC), Aboriginal Edmonton Directory founder, in partnership with the Edmonton Aboriginal Relations Office have worked collaboratively to reproduce this directory with the intent to help you navigate the diverse and friendly Edmonton community. We hope you find it useful. Your feedback and suggestions are welcomed.

Located in the heart of downtown, this Edmonton landmark is the home of our civic leadership and a gathering place for the community. Edmonton City Hall was designed by local architect Gene Dub and opened on August 28, 1992, on the site of the former City Hall. The design combines old with new, as located throughout the building are reclaimed pieces of the old City Hall.

There is always something happening at City Hall in every season. Edmontonians come here to enjoy events, festivals, and activities year round. City Hall is also the home of the Citizen and New Arrival Information Centre, the Employment Centre, the Sports Hall of Fame and Kids in the Hall Bistro.

Edmonton Public School Board - First Nations, Metis, Inuit and Diversity Education

Our umbrella of work includes linking students to each other, to staff and to the greater Aboriginal community as we strive to ensure that each student completes high school. We support a wide variety of programming and school cluster projects and look for ways to include community partners. Our current emphasis is on creating welcoming, inclusive environments that possess culture integrity.

Staff in the unit are available to work with school staff on student engagement, building cultural knowledge, linking families to community supports and working with schools on infusing curriculum. We also collect wise practices that are working in our district in order to decrease any barriers to education.

The mission of Edmonton Public Schools Aboriginal Education is to improve and enhance the educational experience of Aboriginal students, families and staff within Edmonton Public Schools. The guiding principles are:

- Having the Aboriginal perspective guide educational planning and program delivery;
- Understanding, accepting, validating, recognizing, and implementing the Aboriginal way of knowing, learning and doing;
- Drawing on the strengths of Aboriginal peoples.

The First Nations, Métis, and Inuit Education unit strives to support and enhance the educational experience and achievement of First Nations, Métis, and Inuit students.

We do this by helping schools develop a holistic understanding of First Nations, Métis, and Inuit cultures, worldviews, histories, and current realities. We believe this approach fosters relationships that welcome, nurture, and honour individual student’s stories and cultures and supports the weaving of culture and curriculum to enhance the learning for all students.

We collaborate with district staff, First Nations communities, Métis and Inuit organizations, and stakeholders to develop strategies, resources, programs and initiatives that support personal growth, high school completion, and career pathways to post-secondary studies or the world of work.

The ECLC also holds legal information sessions, in partnership with the Edmonton Public Library, on a regular basis at various library branches throughout the city.
The John Howard Society of Alberta is a non-profit agency concerned with the problem of crime and its prevention. The organization takes its name and spirit from the 18th century humanitarian John Howard, whose name has become a symbol of humane consideration for prisoners. It was incorporated in 1949, and today the organization consists of six separately incorporated districts along with the Provincial Office.
NCSA was established in 1970 with the objective of providing assistance in courts to Aboriginal people in conflict with the law. Agency leaders recognized that Aboriginal people often feel alienated and confused by legal and court procedures, and require support in navigating the judicial system. In response to these unique needs of Aboriginal people, NCSA established its flagship Courtworker Program. NCSA has since grown into a dynamic, multifaceted agency committed to providing healing and harmony to the Aboriginal community through a variety of avenues. Programs that prevent youth recruitment into street gangs, family and community wellness programming to legal education, national health campaigns, video production and community-based research, while establishing a province-wide presence through an extensive network of regional and branch offices. Over the past four decades, our organization has helped to shape restorative and social justice models and practices, and have provided programs and services designed and delivered by Aboriginal people for Aboriginal people.
