WHAT DO YOU WANT TO BE WHEN YOU GROW UP?
Helping Teens Find the Right Job and Career Path

The age-old question we hear growing up fosters bygone aspirations from our youth. Today’s teens have access to college and career advisors in schools, mentors in the community, as well as family members offering guidance. There are also easily accessible resources found online to help guide teens to a successful future. Here are a sample of the resources that are available.

CAREER ONE STOP
Sponsored by the US Department of Labor
Explore career, education, job training options on this one stop site. Although the site is not specifically for teens, valuable resources on the site help young adults formulate their career path. Individuals can take self-assessments, search job opportunities, set realistic career goals and learn about career options available.

Visit the Students and Career Advisors page to begin.

CareerOneStop.org is also a great starting point for workers in various stages of their lives from career changers, to older workers, or Veterans returning from military service.

OCCUPATIONAL OUTLOOK HANDBOOK
US Department of Labor
For those looking to research projected outlooks on a variety of career fields, the Occupational Outlook Handbook, published online by the US Department of Labor, offers clear and concise information on specific jobs, such as the type of educational training required, current salary, job duties, and prospected job growth.
