Letter From Bishop Coyne Regarding the Upcoming Elections

I write to you, my brothers and sisters, with words of encouragement as your bishop and fellow citizen of this great country.

My first encouragement is that each of us who can vote in this November’s election do so. Do not abdicate your right to vote. It is a privilege and a duty. I give thanks to God that my family and I live in the United States of America as free citizens who can exercise the right to vote without coercion or concern that our government or any agency would work to thwart either my right to vote or the intention of my vote. With that in mind, we must exercise that right to vote and have our voices heard. This is especially true here in Vermont where many are standing for local and state offices, positions that often have a greater impact on our day to day lives than national offices.

Secondly, I ask that as people of faith we not leave that faith in Jesus Christ and in his Church at the door of the voting booth but allow that faith to inform the choices we make in that booth. I encourage you to spend some time in prayer prior to voting, asking the Holy Spirit to infuse you with her guidance in making choices that are in keeping with our faith and the common good of all. This is especially true in making choices that, as Cardinal Dolan of New York recently wrote, promote the dignity of the human person, as something “to be defended and promoted as a first priority, a dignity not dependent upon race, green card, stock portfolio, age, or health; [and] the sacredness of human life, from the instant of conception to the holy moment of natural passing, to be defended vigorously rather than diluted and then discarded.”

My final encouragement is to be people of “Good News,” doing and saying only the good things that men and women need to hear, things that will lift them up. There is already too much anger, vitriol, and incivility in our culture today. We do not need to add to it but instead apply a cure: kindness, charity, and mutual respect for each other as brothers and sisters created in the image of God.

May God bless America.

Bishop Christopher J. Coyne

Pope Benedict XVI & Cardinal Sarah on Celebrating the Mass Ad Orientem

“For as lightning cometh out of the east, and appeareth even into the west: so shall the coming of the Son of man be.” (Mt 24:27)

O Direx! This title is variously translated “morning star”, “Diaspring”, “rising sun”, “radiant dawn”, “orient”. All beautifully express the idea of light shattering the darkness of night, of sin and death, of sickness and despair, with its brightness bringing healing and warmth to cold hearts. Jesus is indeed the true light, the radiance of his Father’s splendor. The church prays this petition daily in the Benedictus, joining in the words of Zechariah: “He, the Dayspring, shall visit us in the time of Jacob’s trouble, for he is near to comfort us.” (Zech 9:9). The most natural way to read the “Dayspring” petition is to understand it as a future reference, as the coming of the Messiah, as the dawn breaking upon the world. The Dayspring is not a return to the past but a bold march forward to eternity.

Following Pope Emeritus Benedict XVI, Cardinal Sarah, prefect of the Congregation for Divine Worship and the Sacraments, has repeatedly called for a return to ad orientem worship - in which the priest and the people face together in the same direction toward the front of the church (“liturgical”, or “symbolic” east) for those parts of the Mass which are directed address directly to God.

Following the Church’s tradition and her perennial liturgical practice, it would be safe to assume that the priest is meant to be facing towards the altar “ad orientem” excepting for those places in which he is expressly directed to face the people. This is the most natural way to read the General Instruction of the Roman Missal, since the indication to face the people is given as a change in direction -- the priest had been facing towards the altar, towards the front of the church, UNTIL he was directed to turn and face towards the people.

To this point, consider that in the entrance rites, the procession to the altar has directed the priest in a forward movement -- he clearly approaches the sanctuary facing forward, towards the altar and towards the front of the church. The priest only faces towards the people at that moment when the GIRM directs a change in momentum as he faces the people to make the sign of the Cross. In the entrance rites, the priest is facing ad orientem, except when the GIRM indicates otherwise.

At the effortory it is presumed by the GIRM that the priest is facing ad orientem until he is directed to turn and face the people as he says, “Orate fratres” (“pray, brethren”). He then returns to facing toward the altar and towards the front of the church for the Eucharistic prayer.

Pope Emeritus Benedict XVI indicates that ad orientem is fitting for those portions of the Mass in which the priest addresses God directly. Cardinal Sarah stresses this same point as he states that the priest should face ad orientem not only for the Eucharistic Prayer but also for the Gloria and the Creed.

Pope Emeritus Benedict XVI, Spirit of the Liturgy (chapter 3) writes: “On the other hand, a common turning to the East during the Eucharistic Prayer remains essential. This is not a case of something accidental, but of what is essential. Looking at the priest has no importance. What matters is looking together at the Lord. It is not now a question of dialogue, but of common worship, of setting off towards the One who is to come. What corresponds with the reality of what is happening is not the closed circle, but the common movement forward expressed in a common direction for prayer.”

Cardinal Sarah in an interview with “Famille Chretienne” (23 May 2016) said: “I proposed that the priests and the faithful turn toward the East at least during the Penitential Rite, during the singing of the Gloria, during the Proper and during the Eucharistic Prayer.”

The basic lesson from these two figures of the Church’s Magisterium is that those words which are directed to God should be accompanied by a posture which is likewise directed towards God - ad orientem.
