Kimber J. Palmer, J.D. (Instructor, TAMIU)

Kimber J. Palmer was born and raised in the Midwest, having lived in Nebraska, Indiana, Iowa and Oklahoma. She earned a B.S. in Consumer Resources from Oklahoma State University in Stillwater, Oklahoma and a Juris Doctorate from the University of Oklahoma in Norman. She has since completed 24 post-graduate hours at Texas A&M International University in psychology and English. While in law school Palmer was an editor with the Indian Law Review at OU and had the opportunity of working for the Education and Labor Committee of the U.S. House of Representatives in Washington D.C.

Following graduation from law school Palmer was engaged in the private practice of law in Oklahoma City, Oklahoma. Her primary area of practice was matrimonial litigation, which by its nature requires expertise in the valuation of businesses and other property, tax considerations and consequences, and the law of guardianship and probate, among others. Palmer is a member in good standing of the Oklahoma Bar Association and maintains a license to practice law in Oklahoma. While in Oklahoma City she served as a member of the board of directors, including holding offices of President and Vice-President, for the Oklahoma Indian Legal Services, a non-profit organization providing legal services for Native Americans.

In 2000, Palmer decided to leave litigation and following family, moved to Laredo. She has worked for Texas A&M International University since that time in various capacities. Since 2005, however, she has found her “dream job” as a full-time instructor with the College of Business teaching law-related business and business communication courses. Other activities: she is a teacher-consultant with the South Texas Writing Project and a big sister to K.S., a student at Alexander High School, through the organization Big Brothers, Big Sisters of Laredo.
