Career Resource Centre’s

Best Picks

Considering Law School?
Here are some of our favourite resources:

So, You Want to Be a Lawyer, Eh?

Unlike many resources detailing the process of applying to law school, Adam Letourneau gears this book toward applicants of Canadian law schools. This book covers the entire process of applying to law school, from writing the LSATs, choosing schools, considering combined programs and admission strategies. Furthermore, it details what each grueling year of law school is like, and how to survive it.

Section: Graduate Admissions Tests

The Law School Book: Succeeding at Law School

Also a Canadian resource, this book is filled with information and advice to guide you through the admissions process, explain what the study of law is really like, as well as how to organize your life around school during those three years. In addition, there is ample information on legal reasoning, legal writing, research, moots, examinations and finally, life after law school and the range of opportunities available.

Section: Graduate Admissions Tests

Should You Really Be a Lawyer? The Guide to Smart Career Choices Before, During & After Law School

Law school is a major commitment. The process of preparing for the LSATs can begin years in advance, followed by entrance applications and (at least) three years of living and breathing law. This resource is helpful in determining whether becoming a lawyer is really the right career for you, before you sign your life (and bank account) away for three taxing years of school.

Section: Graduate Admissions Tests