Day One — Tuesday, June 21, 2011

7:30  Conference Registration and Continental Breakfast

8:30  Chairman's Welcome and Opening Remarks
Daryl Gaugler, Senior Vice President, Commercial Solutions, Quintiles
Mr. Gaugler oversees the U.S. Commercial Solutions business with operations in the United States and Canada. As a founder of the U.S.-based outsourcing unit, Mr. Gaugler has built over 100 field sales teams in six years with Innovex, which includes establishing twelve new commercial companies and launching forty-one new products. Mr. Gaugler has led innovations in the outsourcing arena including establishing the first full-time outsourced team, the first fully outsourced launch, the first specialty full-time team, the first risk-based initiative and the first web-based sales force automation tool. Prior to joining Innovex, Mr. Gaugler entered the outsourcing arena with MMD as a Regional Sales Director. He also spent numerous years with Bristol-Myers Squibb in various senior sales positions.

8:45  Manage the Unpredictability of Product Launches with the Flexibility of CSOs
As a result of increasing regulations which have slowed the approval of drugs in the pipeline, pharma faces the challenge of not knowing how much of their internal sales force may be required for a new product launch. It is challenging for companies to build up a sales force for a product launch at the last minute. As a result, companies are more frequently turning to CSOs to provide them with the flexibility of a scalable sales team. During this session, learn how partnering with a CSO can create an efficient sales team for unpredictably timed product launches and review an ROI analysis of using a contract sales team.
• Discuss the challenges of deploying internal sales reps for product launches
• Assess the cost-benefit of contracting with an outsourced sales force
• Determine how to best leverage the flexibility of the contract sales team
Francis Bijak, District Sales Manager, Celgene Corporation

9:30  Expedite Launch with Outsourced Trade Sales and Managed Markets Organization
Launching a new product, especially as a new organization, is a complex and time consuming process. Many companies fail to realize the key activities that need to occur when launching a new product and to understand the resources and timelines needed to do the job right. How are the required activities different depending on the product? How does the delivery model change when distribution is for a traditional pharmaceutical product versus a biologic, an oncology product or a device? How does your relationship with a payer change depending on product type and coverage benefit? How do you get in the door when you have no existing relationships? This session provides insights on what outsourcing can do to support market goals and how an outsourced trade sales and/or managed markets organization can save time and money while expediting your key launch activities.

8:45  Utilize Highly Trained Sales Reps for Specialty Products
The industry realizes that the “one-size-fits-all” sales rep model is no longer working, especially with the growing market of specialty products. To increase the number of sales reps with more extensive experience and education than primary care reps, pharma companies can utilize CSO reps. Because these specially-trained reps have the needed expertise to promote specialty products, companies are able to more effectively sell. During this case study, discuss several cost-effective options for specialty sales.
• Assess the level of expertise needed by specialty sales reps versus primary care reps
• Know why certain activities need to start long before PDUFA
• Review increased efficiencies from utilizing contract reps for specialty products
James Meyer, Former Senior Vice President, TenX Biopharma Inc.

10:30  Networking and Refreshment Break

11:00  Portfolio Evaluation and Product Selection for Contract Sales
A company’s languishing products may become more profitable through strategic repositioning and relaunching techniques. The strategy may be implemented using contract reps whose skills are different than those of highly-trained primary care reps. During this session, learn the methods for determining which products may be the best option for this approach.
• Assess the timeline of patent expiration to determine which products should be the focus of investment
• Determine what level of sales force is needed to meet the promotion required
• Examine what the expected ROI would be from utilizing CSO reps in this capacity
Neil Ferguson, Vice President, Commercial Sales, Quintiles

11:45  Define the Qualifications Needed When Considering a CSO Partner
There are many options to choose from when considering a contract sales organization. In order to select the company that will provide you with exactly what you are looking for, there are certain factors to be considered and qualifications to be met. During this case study, understand the criteria that should be used when comparing available options and how to go about making the final determination of which company to partner with.
• Clearly define the objectives and goals for outsourcing
• Prioritize what qualities the potential CSO must possess
Christopher Holl, Director, Marketing, sanofi-aventis
2:30 Select the Most Appropriate CSO Partner and Construct a Collaborative CSO Contract

Many considerations are reviewed when evaluating and selecting the most appropriate CSO partner for a given project. Each project will have its own needs and challenges hence the evaluation and selection of CSO partner is multi-factorial. Once a partner has been selected, internal stakeholders must come together to determine what specific details the contract should entail to ensure your requirements are met by the new sales team and its supporting management. In addition to the basics such as compliance and liability, other contractual agreements should be considered including performance metrics timelines. During this case study, hear how Pfizer selected and worked with a CSO on a unique project to drive business.

- Review what considerations should be evaluated when selecting a CSO for a unique project
- Understand contractual considerations that make for improved execution and partnerships

Mohamed Issa, Pharm.D., MBA, Senior Brand Manager, Marketing, Pfizer Inc

3:15 Networking and Refreshment Break

3:45 Benefit from Innovative Performance-Based & Value-Driven Approaches When Using a CSO

Contract sales organizations offer the pharmaceutical industry flexibility, risk-mitigation and overall cost-effectiveness by definition. In this session, go beyond the “set program budget” contractual approach to explore different options regarding CSO fee structures/compensation strategies that can help drive win-win outcomes for the CSO-client partnership. Real-world cases are explored and the pros and cons of each approach are presented — the emphasis will be on various types of “pay-for-performance” contract structures.

Kevin Danylechuk, President and General Manager, Vanguard Pharma

4:30 Implement a Change Management Policy to Engage Your Internal Sales Force

As pharmaceutical companies increasingly use CSOs, management must be keenly aware that this will undoubtedly affect the morale of the internal sales force if not managed properly. The attitude of the internal sales force could greatly impact productivity, thus proactive steps must be taken to ensure employees do not feel threatened and are able to adapt to the change. During this discussion, learn how to manage the changing dynamic of your sales team and boost internal morale.

- Understand the common misconceptions about why CSOs are being used
- Define the changes your internal sales force can expect to see
- Incorporate an effective change management policy into practice

Anthony Zecca, Former Senior Director, Sales Strategy, Effectiveness and Innovation, AstraZeneca

5:15 Close of Day One

5:15-6:15 Networking, Wine & Cheese Reception

Day Two — Wednesday, June 22, 2011

8:00 Continental Breakfast

8:30 Chairman’s Review of Day One

Daryl Gangler, Senior Vice President, Commercial Solutions, Quintiles

8:45 Align CSOs with Internal Sales Force Objectives

There are benefits to implementing the embedded deployment model and treating your CSO reps as full-fledged employees. Management must understand the relationship between outsourced reps and internal sales reps to ensure that the collaboration is productive. This session outlines the effective tactics management can use during the integration process and identify best practices to contract sales strategy.

- Detail the benefits of fully integrating the two sales forces
- Discuss the reasons why some companies would keep the sales teams separate
- Highlight how your veteran sales reps can educate the CSO reps, and how these reps’ perspectives can make your overall team more robust and effective

Michael Leonetti, Executive Director, Contract Sales Forces, Boehringer Ingelheim

—— Keynote Address —

9:30 Leadership and Accountability for Internal and Contracted Sales Forces

Internal stakeholders have a responsibility for demonstrating leadership and exemplifying the importance of accountability, both to internal sales forces and contracted sales forces. All reps are charged with certain attainable goals and with proper guidance and motivation these goals should be achieved. During this address, learn the five Proactive Accountabilities™ and how your organization must set the example of accountability and leadership that the entire sales force can follow.

Sam Silverstein, Author, No More Excuses; Former President, The National Speakers Association

Originally from Atlanta, he has a Business degree from the University of Georgia and an MBA from Washington University.
10:30 Networking and Refreshment Break

11:00 Physician Relationship Management and Data Collection Optimization
As pharmaceutical companies scrutinize their mix of sales, PRM and NPP activities to improve sales performance, optimizing data collection practices has never been more important. Data collected from physicians/HCPs, whether through the sales force, online or other marketing channels can support pharmaceutical executives in sales and marketing with the insight they need to optimize physician relationships and increase scripts. Attendees to this session learn:

- How to design an effective data collection strategy
- How to implement effective dynamic data collection in a multi-channel marketing environment

David Bernard, Managing Director, DB Marketing Technologies

11:45 Overcome Physician Barriers and Gain Access to Top Prospects
Companies using contract sales reps have the advantage of being able to bring on ambitious and enthusiastic reps, not jaded by what is perceived as reduced resources. Through new training strategies, you can provide them with the skills they need to be productive in a market where there is very limited face-time with physicians. During this session, learn how management can leverage these qualities to make the most out of shorter face time with physicians and create faster results.

- Channel the enthusiasm and energy of contract sales teams into superior sales performance
- Discover new training strategies that can help CSOs create faster results.
- Learn how segmenting contract sales force training should differ depending on purpose (e.g., product launch vs. growing older brands)

Scott Moldenhauer, Owner, Persuasion Consultants/Great Medical Reps

12:30 Networking Luncheon

1:45 Leverage Outsourced Alternative Sales Channels
With reductions of company sales forces and effectiveness, what cost-effective options are available to expand coverage, reach and frequency? Through strategically incorporating call centers, virtual representatives, web detailing and other non-personal techniques, pharma can promote well-established products with great flexibility and cost management. During this discussion:

- Review the different available non-personal options
- Discuss the benefits to each representation and channel
- Examine strategic applications to complement and extend sales resources and share-of-voice

Mark Gleason, Executive Vice President, Corporate Development, Aptilon DMD

2:30 Ensure CSO Performance Meets Sales Expectations
Once partnered with a CSO, you should expect the CSOs performance will reflect the expectations detailed by the contract. To ensure that your product promotion is successfully executed, management must examine the financial aspects, the contract, the sales force messaging and training. During this case study, hear how UCB partnered with a CSO during October 2008- March 2010 for one of their highly successful brand promotions.

- Assess the performance metrics
- Review how the contract determined the CSO’s function
- Discuss lessons learned from the partnership

Brenda Varney, Director, Established Brands, UCB Pharma
