Early lessons: analysis of Colorado’s marijuana policy decisions available

Collethelinst (4/25)—Deciding how to spend tax revenues from legalized marijuana is an exciting—but challenging—exercise. That’s one of the early lessons documented in a policy brief issued today by the Colorado Health Institute (to be found at http://e-zma.net/ click on/wkfy1C483rd). The report analyzes the regulatory and public policy strategies created for the state’s newly legalized retail marijuana industry. It is timed ahead of the 4/20 marijuana observance in Denver’s Civic Center, billed as one of the world’s largest (although, as the paper points out, public consumption of marijuana remains illegal).

Colorado is one of two states with legalized retail marijuana and the only state with up-and-running retail stores. State leaders and policymakers had little more than a year between voter approval of legalized marijuana in November 2012 to opening day on January 1 to create the parameters of an entirely new marketplace.

The report by the Colorado Health Institute studies the policy decisions made by Colorado, highlights unanswered questions about the implications of the policy and provides a list of early lessons learned. The lessons will be of special interest to policymakers in a number of other states considering changes in marijuana laws—either decriminalization of recreational marijuana or legalization of medicinal or recreational marijuana.

Four categories Colorado’s policy work can be placed into four categories: Regulating the marketplace Connecting access to marijuana by those under 21 Evaluating potential health and security requirements, and Searching and learning

Creating a structure for research and learning Decisions have ranged across a broad continuum, addressing issues as disparate as product packaging, advertising, security requirements, and evaluating potential health impacts. Allocating the tax revenues has emerged as one of the tougher issues, with different ideas about how the money should be spent.

A sampling of the lessons learned: Public interest in marijuana legislation is ahead of public health knowledge, indicating a need for accelerated research; having an in-place regulatory framework for medicinal marijuana provides a glide path for regulating retail marijuana; and states should anticipate significant time and resource demands on both the legislative and executive branches.

Brewers welcome FDA’s stand on Spent Grains Rule

Benett 4/24 – Colorado U.S. Senator Michael Bennet today welcomed the FDA’s commitment to revising a proposed rule that would have imposed additional food safety standards on brewers. Bennet, who has been working with the Colorado Craft Brewers Association, the Colorado Brewers Guild, and other stakeholders to ensure that the FDA’s proposed rule does not impose unnecessary burdens on the brewing industry, welcomed the news that the FDA has reversed its position on a key provision of its proposed rule.

The FDA’s proposed rule, which would have imposed additional food safety standards on the brewing industry, was met with strong opposition from brewers and other stakeholders. Bennet, who holds a degree in food science from Colorado State University, has been a vocal advocate for the brewing industry and has worked closely with the Colorado Craft Brewers Association to ensure that the FDA’s proposed rule does not impose unnecessary burdens on the brewing industry.

Bennet said, “The FDA’s decision to reverse its position on a key provision of its proposed rule is a welcome development for the brewing industry. The proposed rule would have imposed additional food safety standards on the brewing industry, which would have had a significant impact on the craft brewers across the state. The FDA’s decision to reverse its position on this key provision is a positive step forward for the craft brewing industry.”

Bennet added, “The craft brewing industry is one of the fastest-growing segments of the American economy, and it is important that we work together to ensure that this industry continues to thrive. The FDA’s decision to reverse its position on a key provision of its proposed rule is a welcome development for the craft brewing industry.”

Lake Pueblo asks for help protecting nesting birds

CoParkWild 4.2/2 — Spring is here and birds are beginning to make their homes. At Lake Pueblo State Park, several have chosen locations to nest where the public may encounter them. The park is asking for your help in keeping those sites safe.

This is a vulnerable time for bird parents and their young so park officials are asking people to please observe and photograph nests from a safe and respectful distance. Simplicity can be a death sentence for the young. Colorado Parks and Wildlife understands and appreciates the interest in local wildlife, and the love for baby animals, but too much human activity can be a death sentence for young birds.

In order to protect these birds, perimeters have been set up at some of the nests at Lake Pueblo Park. Visitors who encounter主题活动 ca Trophy fish in the area should be asked to stay at a distance of 50 feet to place to protect the birds, but also the public.

Even if you are not a birder, you are well equipped to protect their nests with talons and sharp beaks and do if they feel their young are being threatened,” said Pueblo County. Kerrigan, Park Operations Manager. “Please do not put yourself or your dogs in harms way”.

Dogs are required to be on a leash at all times at Lake Pueblo State Park. Off-leash dogs are a factor in many nest failures. Keeping dogs on a leash keeps them safe and helps to protect the natural resources we all enjoy.

CU offers useful guides for testing water in areas of oil and gas development

CU 4.3) — A free, downloadable guide for individuals who want to collect baseline data on their well water quality and monitor their groundwater quantity is now available this week by the University of Colorado Boulder’s Colorado Water and Energy Research Center (CWERC).

The “how to guide,” Monitoring Water Quality in Areas of Oil and Natural Gas Development: A Guide for Water Well Users, is available in PDF format at http://cwerc.colorado.edu. It seeks to provide well owners with helpful, independent, scientifically sound and politically neutral information about how energy extraction or other activities might affect their groundwater.

The guide spells out the process of establishing a baseline for groundwater conditions, including how best to monitor that baseline and develop a long-term record.
